Marshall Tucker Band scores a '10'

Tenth is an appropriate designation for the latest Marshall Tucker Band album in more ways than one. Ask any numerologist—ten is the number signifying fullness, excellence and perfection. The music laid down by the band from Spartanburg, S.C., on their second LP for Warner Bros. Records, is all this and more. It marks a further expansion of the alluring jazz directions heard on their smash Warner's debut Running Like The Wind, as well as an exhilarating consolidation of their rock and rhythm roots. Tenth comes at an auspicious juncture in this eminent American band's career, a fresh sound at the start of a new decade.

Over all the years of the group's collective existence, through each of their albums, one of the secrets of The Marshall Tucker Band's success has been the difficulty of defining their music. There is, quite literally, something for everybody in The Marshall Tucker sound.

Even the members of the band have divergent opinions on the subject. Bassist Tommy Caldwell says the music is 'country-jazz.' His brother and lead guitarist Toy Cladwell thinks of the group as 'a real progressive country band.' Rhythm guitarist George McCorkle prefers the designation 'an American rock 'n' roll band' which plays 'traditional American music.' He prefers producer Stewart Levine's description as a 'country-jazz band.' The important thing is that all these divergent influences meld into the uniquely infectious Marshall Tucker brew.

"I don't think there'll ever be six cats that get along this well," ventures Tommy Caldwell on the subject of the band's ten year association. "To me, this is the tightest band that ever was or ever will be on stage."

"We've always had fun playing together," adds Doug Gray. "We're a 20 member family, counting the road crew. If your goal is to be the best damn rock 'n' roll band in the country, then you stay together."

Tenth, produced by Stewart Levine, features ten new Marshall Tucker originals including: 'It Takes Time,' 'Disillusion,' 'Gospel Singin' Man,' 'Without You' and 'Foolish Dreaming.' A stunning entry into a new decade, Tenth establishes the Marshall Tucker Band's dominance in contemporary music for another glorious decade.
