NAACP To Meet Sunday At Union Baptist Church

The Durham Branch NAACP will host its November monthly meeting at Union Baptist Church, 904 N. Roxboro, Durham, on Sunday, November 25, at 4 p.m. The Durham Branch NAACP will accept nominations for officers and members of the Executive Committee who will serve the 1991-92 term. In order to participate in this election process, NAACP members must present proof of membership (membership card or receipt) which should not be dated less than 30 days from the date of this assembly. The public is invited.

renaming UCSD's Third College after the slain civil rights leader.

Cecil Lytle, Third College provost, said negotiations with the family are nearly complete.

An agreement would lead to "substantive connections" between the Third College, an undergraduate school, and the Martin Luther King Center for Nonviolent Social Change in Atlanta, largely through student internships, he said.

But Lytle said King's widow, Coretta Scott King, remains wary of any plans by San Diego to honor King because two previous efforts failed. The San Diego Port District last year refused to name the new convention center after King, and in 1987 city voters rescinded a City Council decision to rename a major street after King.

"She's upset at San Diego," Lytle said of Mrs. King. "She wants more than the application of the name. She wants a commitment." Lytle said Mrs. King wants the college to issue a statement saying it supports the teaching of non-violent social change and to establish either a scholarship fund or an endowed chair in her late husband's name.

The proposal to change the name of Third College, along with any conditions attached by the King family, must be approved by UCSD Chancellor Richard Atkinson and the UC Board of Regents.

The 20-year-old Third College is so named because it was the third undergraduate college established at UCSD. The two other undergraduate colleges are named after scientist Roger Revelle and naturalist John Muir.

With charges of plagiarism now clouding some of King's academic work, approval of the name change may be less than certain.

Lytle said the allegations are "a concern." They were raised this week by historian Clayborne Carson over unattributed passages in King's doctoral dissertation.

The provost said he doesn't believe the controversy detracts from King's accomplishments in civil rights.

"Is it a perfect name? No, I don't think there is a perfect name," Lytle said. "I think it boils down to what are we trying to capture in naming Third after Martin Luther King. The point here is to look toward the future and recapture the past."

director, told the N.C. Study Commission on Public Health on Thursday that state health officials need more money and more personnel to keep up with the growing AIDS problem.

The commission, which is meeting this week to determine whether any legislation is needed, will hold a public hearing at 10 a.m.

Friday in the auditorium of the Legislative Building. People who want to speak may sign up outside the auditorium beginning at 9 a.m.

As of this month, 1,577 people have been diagnosed with AIDS in the state. An estimated 11,000 to 14,000 more are infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV), which causes AIDS, but many of them don't know it.

Wester said the department intended to phase out anonymous testing for HIV, which is available at all 100 county health departments, over the next few years. State Health Director Robert H. Levine disclosed the plan last week.

Anonymous testing allows people to find out whether they are infected without giving their names. Those who choose to give their names are reported to the health department if they are found to have HIV.

But several speakers at the hearing said many people do not seek testing or treatment if anonymity was eliminated.

price to pay for opening up the North Carolina General Assembly." Several coalition members said privately that the decision to back Blue early came, in part, to avoid retribution from other Democrats. Unofficial counts indicate Blue and Rep. Bob Hunter, D-Marion, were locked in a close battle to win the nomination of the Democratic caucus.

Support from the 14 Democrats remaining in the original coalition could give Blue a margin of as few as four votes to win the caucus vote, legislators said.

Mavretic, in notifying Blue of the coalition's decision, said he believed their votes would give him "a comfortable margin of victory." Mavretic said he was unsure what retribution might be imposed for his coalition with Republicans.

"A lot of that depends on who's selected speaker," Mavretic said. "In this case, clearly we have provided as many votes for Dan Blue as his own caucus has. It would be difficult ... to take retribution on a bloc of votes as big as your caucus vote."
