Ø8/ÈØ/95 WILSON LIBRARY NC 27515-8890

The Carolina Cimes HETRUTH UNBRIDGED

OLUME 94 - NUMBER 35

DURHAM, NORTH CAROLINA - SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2015

TELEPHONE (919) 682-2913 PRICE: 50 CENTS

Amelia Boynton Remembered as the 'Rosa Parks' of Selma Movement

By George E. Curry NNPA Editor-in-Chief WASHINGTON (NNPA) elia Boynton Robinson, who d Wednesday in Montgomery, at the age of 104, is being ised as the "Rosa Parks" of Selma voting rights move-

Mrs. Boynton, as she was own throughout the movehad been hospitalized suffering a stroke in July. was a courageous voting hts crusader who was brutally en on "Bloody Sunday" on Edmund Pettus Bridge, the leg of the Selma to Montnery, Ala. March that providthe impetus for passage of the dmark Voting Rights Act of 5, which was signed into law President Lyndon B. Johnson. She and her late husband, Boynton, opened their me to Atlanta-based voting organizers representing Student Nonviolent Coordig Committee (SNCC) and Southern Christian Leader-Conference (SCLC). Dr. rtin Luther King, Jr. also concted many of his strategy sesis in the Boynton home.

"Dr. Boynton was the straw stirred the drink. She was najor catalyst in the Selma to Montgomery march," said narles Steele, Jr., president and EO of SCLC, the organization founded by Dr. King. "She bed start and more imporly, bring attention to 'Bloody day' and her strength, courand tenacity helped make ma the historical icon that we w today. Dr. Boynton was selma what Rosa Parks was Montgomery," a reference the African American seamss whose refusal to give up seat to a white patron ignited 1955 Montgomery, Ala. Bus cott that propelled King to nal fame.

President Barack Obama, was with the wheelchairand Boynton in March to immemorate the 50th anniverof the Selma to Montgom-March, also praised the civil its warrior.

Fifty years ago, she marched Selma, and the quiet heroism nose marchers helped pave way for the landmark Voting nts Act," he said in a state-t. "But for the rest of her life, kept marching - to make sure aw was upheld, and barrito the polls torn down. And erica is so fortunate she did." Dbama added, "To honor the cy of an American hero like nelia Boynton requires only it we follow her example - that of us fight to protect every-e's right to vote."

Rep. John Lewis (D-Ga.),

se skull was cracked in Selon "Bloody Sunday," said: his nation has lost a crusader, arrior, and a fighter for jus-She was one of the most endable, reliable leaders to d up for the right to vote elma, Alabama and in the perican South.'

e continued, "Amelia Boynwas fearless in the face of al injustice, willing to risk he had on the frontlines of ge in America. She was ard, shoved and pushed in t of the Dallas County courte by sheriff Jim Clark. She knocked down on Bloody day on March 7, 1965, on the und Pettus Bridge as 600 of tempted to march to Montery to dramatize the dire d for voting rights legislation is country.

ewis noted that Boynton led registration drives in Alana long before he was born. She was a co-founder of the as County Voters League in and held voter registration s throughout the darkest, most dangerous decades of segregation in Alabama, from the 1930s through the 1950s," Lewis recounted. "In 1964, she became the first African American woman to run as a Democratic candidate for Congress in Alabama."

Mrs. Amelia Boynton Robinson (Photo by Stephonia Taylor McLinn)

Born Aug. 18, 1911 in Savannah, Ga., Boynton moved to Selma after graduating in 1927 from what was then Tuskegee Institute in Alabama, now Tuskegee University. She taught in her native Georgia before taking a job in rural Dallas County, Alabama as a demonstration agent for the S. Department of Agriculture, helping residents learn about nutrition, health care, food production, and homemaking.

She outlived three husbands. Her first husband, Samuel Boynton, whom she married in 1936, died in 1963, the year before the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was signed into law by President Johnson. Her second husband, Bob Billups, died in 1973. Her third husband, James Robinson, a Tuskegee Institute classmate, died in 1988. She moved to Tuskegee, where she was living at the time of her death, to be with him after they were mar-

She is survived by a son, Bruce Carver Boynton. Another son, Bill Boynton, Jr., died last

Andrew Young, a former Martin Luther King lieutenant and former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, recalled how difficult it was for blacks to register to vote in Alabama during the 1950s and 1960s.

Writing in his memoir, An Easy Burden: The Civil Rights Movement and the Transformation of America, he said, "In 1964, no blacks were registered in Wilcox County, less than four percent in Hale County, slightly less than seven percent in Perry and Choctaw Counties, and less than three percent in Dallas County, where Selma was lo-

And he described what happened to those who tried to alter the status quo.

"In 1963, Bernard Lafayette and his wife settled in Selma and attempted to begin a full-fledged SNCC project," Young said. "They hoped to win some converts to SNCC among young people at Selma University, but the administration of the school was extremely fearful, and they were banned from the campus. However, a few students did become active, and joined with adults like Mrs. Amelia Boynton, president of the banned NAACP, and the pastor of the Catholic Mission to form the beginnings of a movement.

"It did not take long for Bernard to establish himself in Selma, but he was viciously beaten by a group of whites in front of his home one night, and might have been killed had a neighbor not appeared on his porch with a rifle and chased the attackers

Despite constant threats, Boynton did not give in to fear.

Young wrote that she and her husband had two spare rooms and that they made one available to him and the second was shared by Dorothy Cotton and Septima Clark when they were in town to organize blacks. He wrote, "Mrs. Boynton never charged us a penny in rent for the months we stayed in her

In 1964, a year after the death of her first husband, Boynton ran for Congress, the first female African American to seek that office in Alabama and the first woman of any race to run for Congress as a Democrat. She received 10 percent of the vote, a major accomplishment in an era in which few blacks were allowed to register.

Boynton, in wheelchair next to President Obama, at 50th anniversary celebration of the Selma to Montgomery March (Photo by Stephonia Taylor McLinn).

Blacks 'Left Behind' in New Orleans Recovery

10 Annivresary Remembers Tragedy In New Orleans

By Freddie Allen

NNPA Senior Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON (NNPA) - As Gulf Coast residents and policymakers celebrated the recovery of the Crescent City on the 10th anniversary of Hurricane Katrina, advocacy groups challenged the narrative of a resilient and better New Orleans by launching KatrinaTruth.org, a website that shows that post-Katrina progress in New Orleans still hasn't reached poor black communities. Judith Browne Dianis, the co-director of the Advancement Project, a multiracial civil rights group, said that, 10 years ago, the Advancement Project was on the ground in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, working with communities to protect the rights of survivors "Ten years later, the city of New Orleans wants to sell us a bag of bad goods, telling us that the city has gotten better, but unfortunately the recovery and the reconstruction has been uneven and African American families have been left be-

On the a telephone call with reporters to discuss the launch of KatrinaTruth.org, Dianis described a landscape dominated by charter schools, dispossession, destruction and gentrification and new businesses that catered to a "mew class of wealthier, white residents," as black New Orleanians face severe disparities in education, employment, housing and the criminal justice system.

A recent poll by CNN/ORC found that more than half (51 percent) believe that the United States is still vulnerable to a "Katrina-like emergency" 10 years after the storm claimed more than 1,300 lives.

This is why the myth of resilient New Orleans that the city wants to sell everyone so dangerous," explained Dianis. "It is a narrative that paves over the history of black New Orleans and ignores the true cost of exclusionary, disaster capitalism poli-

KatrinaTruth.org is a direct response to the wrong narrative of progress espoused by the city's Katrina10 media campaign and the media that echoes those sentiments, said Dianis. "In New Orleans, especially post-Katrina, what we're seeing is nonprofit groups parachuting in, to 'fix' New Orleans and to fix our families and to do what they think is best for New Orleans, but this has led not only to the duplication of work but also opportunity for new organizations to ignore the historical struggles that have plagued the black community," said Gina Womack, the executive director of Families and Friends of Louisiana's Incarcerated Children (FFLIC), a nonprofit focused on juvenile justice