The next morning he made a raft to cross the Alabama, or to float down under cover of the night as might best suit his purposes, in crossing the river the raft nearly sunk, wet all the ammunition they had save two cartridges, and lost one of their muskets, and the corporal broke his bayonet in the action of the day before. In this deplorable situation they were again attacked by a party of six Indians; they made battle, but for the want of ammunition they could not contend with such a superior force. Lieut. Wilcox was shot through the body and Corporal Simpson through the kneewounded as he was, he made to the canoe of the Indians, and called to his only remaining man to bring the corporal in his arms to the canoehe then jumped into the canoe with a view of killing an Indian which remained for the protection of the canoe.

His object was to get his men in the canoe and endeavor to get off, but the Irai ans pursued them too close, and Lieut. Wilcox and the corporal were both taken prisoners-the soldier made off unhurt -Soon after, the boats which he had been in search of, came in sight—the Indians fled, and left the victims with their hatchets and arms in the canoe. They were taken on board the boats and carried to Fort Claiborne, but both of them expired on the evening of the 15th. The private soldier got in safe. and from him the above information has been received.

To the misfortune of losing their ammunition and musket, and the dastardly conduct of the militia man, may be attributed the death of this gallant young officer and his brave corporal.

They were interred on the 17th of February at Fort Clairborne on the Alabama river, with
