What a commentary on the "best society !"This is the etiquette of socalled upper tendom. A man of 'honor' is satisfied to have his home desolated, his family connections disgraced, to stand up and be shot down like a dog, provided he can draw a pair of hair-triggers on the seducer of his wife. And the offender is received in the "best society" as a he ro, and new honors and new conquests await him. Surely there is something very rotten in Denmark when such things can be and when so many hidden offences come to the surface together. The mere fact of exposure has lost its terrors. Society pretends to abhor, but soon pities and embraces, and a new garland is added to the coronal of social renown. There is no court of honor to pass upon these cases, but society owes it to itself to put a ban that cannot be removed, and one whose sting will be foreverfelt, upon the unblushing violators of social ot-
