An Infernal Town.

Theodore Hale has named his brimstone mine, situated in Humboldt county, "Inferno," and has located and laid out a town around it bearing the same classic apellation. The new town is supplied with numerous streets, avenues, alleys, etc., with names corresponding with that of the town. For instance, the stream near it is called the "River Styx;" the pass in the canon is denominated "Hellgate;" the streets are known as Devil's CASSIMERS, LADIES' DRESS GOODS, avenue, Brimstonelane, Whisky alley, Imps' Promenade, etc. The prominent places of resort are the "Robbers' Roost," "Murderers Retreat," "Palace Inferno," and "Devil's Delight." There being no wood or coal to be had in town, the fires are made entirely of brimstene or sulphur produced from the mines. The stream near the town called the "Styx," is not a stream of water, as one might suppose, but of melted sulphur and liquid potash. Their bibulants are sulphur cocktails, rimstone punches and potassium Tuesday. The fire originated in Pal ace Inferno, which was built entirely of brimstone, like all the other build ings in the place. There being no water or Babcock fire-extinguisher in the place, the burning element melted and running along Devil's avenue and Imps' Promenade, set fire to the Murderer's Retreat, and from thence all over the town, which was soon reduced to a veritable "lake of fire and
