There is a great deal of dissatisfaction about the way in which this post office is being managed. The public has become accustomed, in a measure, to everybody's mail going into everybody else's box, and to receiving and sending letters all around town during the whole day; but they object to being deprived of receiving; each other's mail fige hours after time, as it delays the courtesy of the daily exchange.

This arrogant disregard of duties the public, cannot always go on. Some fine morning the post master here may be invited to hand over his keys, and then he will realize for the fir t time that he does not hold a life lease on the office.
