FATALLY BURNED AT THE ALTAR -The New Orleans Picayune says: "On the 14th instant, several young ladies, all attired in pure white raiment, visited St. Mark's Church, on Chartres street, a short distance below Jackson Square, to enroll their names in the wore a flowing veil, and each held a lighted candle. While they were at the altar, one of the postulants accidentally brought her candle in contact with her veil when the tact with her veil, when the gauzy substance blazed like powder. She ran down the sisle, half crazed with fright. At the same time, another young lady was discovered to be in a like situation; she, too, ran, frightened out of her senses, but a young man succeeded in quenching the flames. Fire had done its worst, and Friday evening Annie Julia Planchard, fourteen years old, passed away forever. She was a beautiful, lovely child, daughter of Mr. J. J. Planchard, a member of the New Orleans bar. The other unfortunate will recover,'

In Hindoo districts, the Brahmins, for a consideration, promise the people immunity from small-pox. At one place an ingenious chamar, having found out a strange oval-shaped hole in a rock, gave out that all those who passed through the hole would escape smal pox. People came with their offerings, and at last the Thakur of Marwar brought his child to pass through the rock. As some people who were actually suffering with small-pox had been through this not strange that the child caught the disease. The Thakur was so angry that he had the chamar seized; but the chamar was equal to the occasions, and declared that the child was bewitched by a village woman. She was therefore burnt with hot copper pice till the authorities interfered. The people still believe in the power of the chamar and in his story about the
