Long Eared Rabbit.

Mr T S Rankin, who stays with Mr W L ingly. Boyd, received, on yesterday morning, from a friend in Denver, Colorado, the ears of one of the tribe known in the West as the "jackass rabbit." The ears measure 101 inches from the tip of one to the tip of the other, and a casual observer might suppose, if the matter had not been explained to him, that they were or had been the property of the animal after which this rabbit has been so same time. The Raleigh News' Correspondent and Mrs. Moyle.

The gentleman who is corresponding with the Raleigh News, from this city, sent to us, last evening, a lengthy communication in response to the article in Friday's OESERVER, from the pen of Mrs. Annie P. Moyle. Both sides have already "had their say," and we do not see that it is incumbent upon us to publish this article. To be entirely frank about the matter, we do not care to have anything more upon this subject in our columns. We give, however, the following extract from the correspondent's communication, which is the principal point made by him. He says that he transmitted the communication to the News "From the purest motives, i. e., to show the evil effects that the late Civil War has heaped upon the citizens of the South. > Capt Potts, of the Air Line, and Capt Ficking, of the C, C & A, had often heard of each other, but met for the first time in the office of the Central Hotel, last night. Each knew the other as soon as he saw him, and they both advanced to shake hands at the onversation, and all eyes were turned upon them. Capt Potts is none of your lilliputians, but Capt Fickling, like Saul, the son of Kish, "from his shoulders and upwards, is higher than any of the people." He measures six feet nine, Capt Potts six feet seven. Mr R W Best, of Raleigh, was here not long ago, and met Capt Fickling; he stands six feet five and a half himself, but he had to look way up to see Capt F's face, and it made him feel right bad to meet a man who held over him four inches and a half. He stands on one side of not know of his illness until the news of his death was received, and this, as may be supkey on the other, but the darkey can't see posed was a great shock. The deceased was his murderous glances-the gleam of the well known in this State, particularly e'green-eyed monster' which plays in his among railroad men. He was for several years a conductor on the North Carolina Railroad, and had many friends and ac quaintances here in Charlotte. At the end of the war, he left for the South, and accepted a situation as sleeping car conductor on a line running from New Orleans to Louisville, Ky., which position he held until about three months ago. As the New North State says, "his death is not only regretted which arrived in the river near this city two by his relatives, but will be felt by his numerous friends in this State who remember his many good traits, and acts of kindness to them years ago."
