

Coloring Human Hair by Eating Eggs.

[From the London Echo.] The much-vaunted question, How to get gold hair, is solved at last. While the Germans shrink from being held a fair-haired nation who knows, but the sufferers, what other nations have gone through to win the hair despised by Prussia? Ladies have borne unheard of tortures in pursuit of this fictitious gold. One who had to be turned round in the sun for hours during the process, bore with stoic fortitude the terrible headaches involved each week, nor ever complained of what she had to pay, though, after all, she was scarcely even electrified. Some run other risks, in robbing Teuton corpses of their long, fair locks; and all is ineffectual while eyes and skin remain to give the lie to hair. Now, no more dyes, migrations, or wigs will be necessary. Everybody may sport the "glad, gold hair"—nay, blue eyes, too, and snowy skins. All you have to do is to go and live on an island and eat penguins' eggs—and the more you eat the fairer you will get. None need despair, for hair too dark to change to gold turned red, and red hair, being more the rage than flaxen, tant mieux. The sole in question is one of the Orzot group, on which the survivors of the unfortunate Strathmore were wrecked last year, and only rescued after six months' duration. They had little to eat but penguins' eggs—and doubtless the eggs without the island would be of no avail—but the slight inconvenience of a sameness in food would be readily encountered by the votaries of fashion. A survivor writes: "The eggs did every one a great deal of good. A most remarkable thing was that every one had fair skin and light hair, dark faces and hair but quite changed—black hair turned brown or red, and fairer people quite flaxen." If some enterprising Englishman does not immediately set up a hotel on this enchanted spot we shall never give John Bull credit for knowing how to make his fortune.

As they saw the bees passing themselves and families, the lady uttered a faint "Gee whizz!" "We can't go there!" "Pshaw!" ejaculated her lord and master, "do't be foolish. Bees never molest any one that does not molest them. They are perfectly harmless if you will let them alone. All you need is a little nerve; when they come buzzing about you walk right along and don't so much as make a motion towards them, even if they should light on your face. Come on, now; if you haven't nerve, just look at me and see how simple it is." With a pardonable feeling of pride in her noble husband, the wife watched him as he moved steadily up to the tree where most of the insects were having a rehearsal a la Gilmore's band, while a number were doing the Skidmore Guard on the fence, and still others were sliding around in the air, evidently on picket duty, humming, "We'll march around Jerusalem." Seeing that her husband was not annoyed by the little fellows, the lady followed him, but took the precaution to throw a light shawl over her head and shoulders, leaving only a peephole for one eye. Running up to her husband—who was walking along looking at a bee which had just lit on his nose, and wondering whether the cursed little creature was going to give him one just for luck, and thinking how sweet he would look with a proboscis resembling a quarter section of a lobster—she inquired: "John, ain't you afraid?" "Not thinking of anything else appropriate to the occasion. He curled up his lip and the tip of his nose in disdain at the thought, and just then he got it from the bee upon the upper deck. His wife will never forget the exclamation he gave utterance to, and the bystanders generally remarked that it was exhaustive and fully did justice to the occasion. He struck at the bee with the victrola, and in a second the whole Skidmore guard, Jerusalem warblers and Gilmore band were upon him. They took him on the face and hands, nibbled his ears, prospected his back, and crawled up his nose and sank more shawls on the top of his bald head than there are on the Cornstalk lode. If he had been possessed of a thousand hands he could not have kept the enemy off, and if his name had been John he could not have helped calling down maledictions upon all the women as he heard his wife advising ninner her shawl: "Don't hit at them, John! Don't fight them!" There John's general roar of laughter as the "man of nerve" took to his heels, his arms working like an old-fashioned windmill during a gale, while his wife walked along secure in her bee-proof.

Burlington Hawkeye: The man who clings to the edge of all the bed-clothes and wraps himself up in them every time he rolls over is now about ripe enough to kick out of bed, and the shivering fellow who sleeps with him is appointed a committee of one to do the kicking.
