ground for it, great credit for the leading part he has taken in the restoration of peace and some degree of fraternity throughout the country, The warfare of the machine politicians upon him has been an unsuccessful one, and he stands up in this message, a good deal like a man, and says he did right in the withdrawal of the troops from the Southern States and is glad he did so. Regarding the appropriations recently asked of Congress, the President generally approves the suggestions made by the heads of the several departments. His views upon the currency are about as were expected from him. He believes that there should be no wavering in the steps which are being taken to bring about resumption in 1879. He is in favor of making silver a liberal subsidiary coin, but opposes making it an unlimited legal tender. He defends his civil service order and order to the United States troops on the Mexican frontier. This about disposes of the message, in which there is nothing very new or very startling.
