COLUMBIA, S C, May 25.

Editor Charlotte Observer :-Please allow your correspondent te explain what is termed "a crushing de-feat" to the veteran litigator in the above-stated cause. This action was brought to wind up the affairs of the deceased Commercial Bank, and to hold those liable under the charter for the debts of the bank remaining unpaid after the assets were exhaust ed. After a long litigation in this cause the receiver absconds with the assets turned over to him; and the stockholders, by various defenses and appeals, delay the litigation; by the sworn statements of officers and stockholders this bank continued business until 1865, and continued to use the franchises and appropriate, and divide up the assets as dividends and other uses until that date. They used and lived on the substance of the bank. In a recent case of adjudication in the some object in view was indeed good, United States Supreme Court, that and in fact every word was well direccourt held that the banks in South Car- ted, and, surely there is not a single olina failed when they suspended specie payments, by general resolution in

A Little Scrap of History Never Told.

[Reidsville Times.]

When Sherman's army was just entering Raleigh and Johnston's army was passing through, several old gen-tlemen of the first prominence and station besieged Governor Vance in his office and besought him to surrender to Sherman the keys of office and thus virtually to end the war. Now a few days before this Vance had made a talk to the boys in gray at Smithfield and told them that so long as a North Carolina soldier carried a musket he should stick to them as the Governor of the State. Well. As Johnston's army filed through the city the gallant Hoke's division/brought up the rear and Gen Hoke eatching the news that efforts were then being made to have Vance surrender to Sherman, he didn't like it a bit; he would rather risk the chances of a lead bullet in his stomach than any such news as that, so the true and chivalrous soldier halted the best Miss Platt, niece of President Hayes, will be married at the White House the latter part of June to General Russell Hastings, of come, to capture Vance and all the old men and carry them off with the soldiers before the State by the civil authorities should be surrendered to Sherman. As Hoke entered he said "Vance, you said at Smithfield that as long as a North Carolina soldier carried a gun you should stick to the government; now, come, and look out here," and he motioned Vance to the window on Hillsboro street, down which his splendid division was then tramping. (The nervous old gentlemen were then huddled together into one corner of the office.) Vance promptly replied; "General I'll be with you to-night." And sure enough he kept, his word. That night he he kept his word. That night he marched into camp and entering the general's tent in rough mountain boy style he began to unshuck his breeches, and to the unanimous cry of, "Governor, we are glad to see you," he only responded, "Boys, are any of Wheeler's cavalry around here? if they are on this stool," and suiting the action She should have come South and lived in to the word he was soon stretched out fast asleep sticking to the remnant of the government that "still carried a

Vance in Catawba-A Gala Day in Newton,

[Piedmont Press.]

The closing exercises of Catawba High School, of Newton, under charge of Revs Clapp and Foil, took place last Tuesday. It had been previously announced that Gov Vance would deliver a literary address and at an early hour the town was crowded with backs, wagons and buggies filled with people —all come to hear their great favorite
Z B Vance. He entered the rostrum about 11 o'clock and spoke at considerable length; still, the large audience, about 2,000 people, did not grow weary. Every word seemed to be completely devoured as they fell from his lips. The major part of his address was upon the great importance of a practical education. Every sentence was well chosen, and delivered eloquently and in his own social and pleasing style. The presence of such a large crowd demonstrated to the Governor that the people of Catawba do not only hold him in high regard as a politician, but that they look to him as one who is able to do much towards forwarding the educational interest of our State. His advice to young men relative to educating themselves with
