Sanitary Precautions-Poisoned Water.

[Correspondence of the Observer.] the fluid which enters so largely into his composition should be pure to preserve health. Outside of large cities water is most generally obtained from springs or wells—in some Southern localities from cisterns, either above or below the surface of the ground; this source of supply is however limited. source of supply is, however, limited to certain localities, and from neglect is often impure. Water as it comes from the earth, from its reservoirs, fissures, or veins between strata, or as it falls from the heavens, is always pure, excepting the presence of some harmless, often beneficial, mineral, un-less in a rotten limestone region. But owing to inattention and neglect, this. water, supposed to be pure, is made, by man's act, a deadly poison, gradually sapping the foundations of health; and the diseased one dies, as is supposed by one of the many diseases in the vocabulary of the physician, while in fact he is the victim of water, poisoned either by the neglect of himself or some one else.

of this statement may strike some of your country readers as strange; and the question is asked, how can a well or spring at an isolated farm or house in the country be poisoned by its surroundings? These are really the people I most desire to reach, as they are isolated, and town authorities some and wells are poisoned. The question is thus answered. Water upon the surface of the earth tends to spread itself in every direction in settling laterally, as well as perpendicularly, and would extend as much laterally as perpendicularly were it not for the influence of gravity counteracting the lateral acapillary attraction. Hence the water tending all the time laterally, counter-influenced by gravity, descends on its outer limit in the diagonal of a square of any horizontal distance with an equal depth, and to reach any point helps the service unless intercepted by between where the water starts into the earth and a perpendicular line less confessions of the sort of rascality Philosophy of the New, is now standing they constantly pursued for the good still at the Old Place, on Trade Street, opdrawn upward from the object to the surface. A manure pile, etc, one hundred feet from a well, which is one hundred feet deep, will poison that well by the sipage on a diagonal line. But it will furnish still more poison, since the elevation of the well furnishes a point of relief to sipage water from top to bottom, a greater influx than by the diagonal line flows in. A manure pile, etc., is generally placed at the most convenient place, without reference to the unknown harm it may do. The well or spring is near by, and folly not to be wise. The matter is one of last importance involving, as it does, human happiness and human life. Let all of your readers at once examine their sources of water supply, and see as to whether it is affected or not by any of the above poisoners. A manure pile, etc, can and may destroy a whole family. Many are so situated, owing to limited space, that these evils are necessarily close to their wells or springs. Then sanitary precautions must be exercised contin-New York Mail. We can wouch that it is ually to at once neutralize and remove the matter. The privy must have a box in it, and everything fluid and solid falling into it must be deodorized by earth or charcoal, and then it is readily removed to the compost heap. The manure pile, etc, must be kept constantly cleaned up and carried to the same place, and dry earth or charcoal sprinkled on the beds. The water is thus kept pure, health is improved and the garden and farm enriched by the increased value of the manure,

I will give one of many instances as an illustration of the danger of neglecting this matter. Some thirty years ago, on one of the healthiest plantatations in one of the healthiest connties in this State, the family of the owner and himself were attacked by a terrible disease, called at that time "black tongue," a species of erysipelas. He and the most of the family died, but none of the servants who were far from the house were affected. The place was sold, and the new owner found a large pile of neglected manure near the house, the accumulation of years. Being a good farmer he had it removed to his fields. The result was that the healthy reputation of the place was restored. Here was a case of double poisoning-atmosphere and water-and the removal of the cause restored the health. This subject is too important for a brief article. Volumes could and ought to be written on it, and on the water supply of large cities. The reader is warned; let him attend to it, or suffer the consequences resulting from his obstinacy or stupidity. VIDEITE.

N.B. Since writing the above, some ten days since, I found the following corroboration of my statements in an editorial of the Raleigh Farmer and Mechanic, of July 4th, giving two start-

"A few years ago one of the most popular of the few remaining wells in the city of London was found by analysis to be the source of an epidemic which had nearly depopulated the ward in which it was located. It was filled up at once, and the disease disappeared. "In a small town in the mountains of Water is one of God's greatest blessings to man, and pure water is most necessary to the preservation of health. The average-sized man is facetiously said to be composed of "six pails of water and twelve pounds of solid mater." That same cause—neglected privies, barn yards, cow pens and pig stys—poisons a large portion of the water in our larger towns, villages and country houses. The latter part of this statement may strike some of your country readers as strange; and losing confidence in her from this fear transfer papers and knows. Mr Winters, it is stated, had several times re fused $15,000 for Mollie, but after the race of the Fourth he feared she had been permanently injured, and, losing confidence in her from this fear, determined to sell her. It is more than transfer the state of the sell her.

The Philadelphia Inquirer (Republican) has the following in vindication of Hayes, which, to say the least, is not complimentary to his predecessor, nor creditable to "the party of grand moral ideas." Says the Inquirer:

The novelty of modern Medical, Chemical, and Pharmaceutical Science. No use of any longer taking the large, repulsive, and nauseous pills, composed of cheap, crude, and bulky ingredients, when we can, by a careful application of chemical science, extract all the cathartic another medicinal properties from the most valuable roots and herbs, and concentrate them into a minute Granule, scarcely larger than a mustard seed, that can be readily swallowed by those of the most sensitive stomachs and fastidious tastes. Each little Furgative Pellic represents, in a most concentrated form, as much cathartic power as is embodied in any of the large pills found for sale in drug-shops. From their wonderful cathartic power, in comparison to their size, people who have not tried them are apt to suppose that they are harsh or drastic in effect; but such is not at all the case, the differentactive medicinal, principles of which they are composed being so harmonized and modified, one by the others, as to produce a most searching and thorough, yet gently and kindly operating, cathartic.

What the Philadelphia Herseman Will Do with 10th.]

Mr. Budd Doble informed a Name reporter vesterday that he would enter Mollie McCarthy for the fall races at Baltimere, Saratoga, Long Branch and Jerome Park and possibly bring her to Louisville at the fall meeting of the Jockey Club. He says she has fully recovered from her over-heating here on the 4th, and in two weeks will be as good as she ever was. He expresses the most unbounded confidence in the ability of the mare to make the best record ever made by any mare in the following are among those diseases in the fall prescription.
