On Seeing a Mule Kick a Man Through the Roof of a Shed.

Oh, mule!
What strong and complicate machinery!
What sudden and precipitate extremes;
Man's judgment and his vision must be keen or he
Will hesitate to rouse thee from thy dreams.
A rugged school
Trained thy great quadriceps extensor
To bust a keg of nails, kick down a fence, or
Lift a man, oh mule.

Say, mule,
Thou was't not always thus insoluble,
Insensate to a kindly touch or word?
Not always have thy accents, loud and voluble,
Man's fearful heart with dreadful terror stirred.
Has your harsh rule
Always impelled him, with emotions fleet,
To fly the fondling of thy latter feet?
Say, gentle mule?

Speak, mule;
Why did'st thou, with intense vitality,
Lift through the hingeless roof of yonder shed
A man, an earth born child of immortality,
Because he passed thee with incautious tread?
He was no fool,
That base born, soulless mules should kick him. No;
He was a scholar; an A. M., a Ph. D.; a D.—Oh!!
Whoa, mule!!!

Burlington Hawkeye.

THE INTERNAL REVENUE LAWS.

Something About Their Enforcement in Northwestern North Carolina.

STATESVILLE, N C, August 28.

Editor Charlotte Observer—

I have just returned from Yadkin county, where I have been a witness to and participant in the operations of Collector Mott's force of special deputies, in charge of Captain Abram Bryan, against illicit distillers. And I must say that it is not possible for any set of men to execute the laws, under the existing circumstances, more efficiently or humanely than they did. We found in a section of the county, about 16 miles long and 8 wide, 39 houses which had been used for illicit distilling, and with a few exceptions their contents had been captured and destroyed twice, and some even three times before. Fifteen of these we found either to be in full blast, or very recently in operation. The distiller, trusting more to his heels than his arms, fled instanter, leaving the work of demolition to go on without his assistance. Although we found it almost impossible to get anyone in that section to give us any information concerning them, I am loth to believe that their operations meet the approbation of the entire community. It is a notorious fact that wherever illicit distilling abounds, there you find the most poverty and depravity. One section of Wilkes county is referred to as a striking instance. Ten years ago there was no illicit distilling in it, and the people were prosperous; since then they have commenced and been engaged in it, and we find there just the reverse. I mention these circumstances to call your attention to the good to the State which the press and public opinion could do in co-operating to suppress this traffic. Without their co-operation there is no other course left but a destruction of the property so used, and a vigilant prosecution of the violators of the laws. If you see fit to use this communication in your paper you are at liberty to do so.

Thanking you for the spirit in which you have already noticed this matter,

I remain, yours truly,
W H CHAPMAN,
Revenue Agent.

The New Supreme Court.

[Raleigh News, 28th.]

Commissions were issued yesterday from the executive office to Chief Justice W N H Smith, and Associate Justices John H Dillard and Thomas S Ashe.

These officials all took the oath of office in the morning. The oath was administered by Judge A S Seymour, of the Superior Court, to the chief justice. The latter officer administered the oath to Justices Dillard and Ashe.

The three justices met soon after their installation into office. The only business of importance transacted was the following modification of the rules. The modification as to the call of districts is made to meet the necessity occasioned by the change in the judicial districts, reducing the number from 12 to 9. The following are the changes made:

"Ordered that appeals to the Supreme Court be called at the next term, and until otherwise provided, as follows:

"First week, first district; second and third weeks, third, fourth and fifth districts; fourth and fifth weeks, sixth, seventh and eighth districts; sixth and seventh weeks, ninth and second districts.

"The districts will be taken up in the order above named, and one immediately after the other; and cases not called at the times specified, will go to the foot of the docket, to be called again.

"No book of the library will be allowed to be taken out, except by special permission of the clerk, for use before some court in session, or referee, and the North Carolina reports, digests, and statutes will not be allowed to be withdrawn at all."

Though the first district is assigned the first week, yet appeals therefrom will not be called until Wednesday of that week, as Monday and Tuesday will be devoted to the examination of applicants for license to practice law.

The assembling and organization of this court, as at present constituted, will mark a new and long and earnestly looked for era in our State history. Composed, as it is, of jurists of eminent ability and gentlemen of exalted personal character, it will not disappoint the high expectations of the profession and of the people. Elected without opposition, and thus placed beyond the reach of partisan bias, it has before it a career of great usefulness—one that will redound to the honor alike of the judiciary and the State.

IMPRISONED IN HIS OWN TOMB.

The Late William Niblo's Accidental Night in Greenwood Cemetery.

[New York Mercury.]

About fifteen years ago the late William Niblo, of Niblo's Garden, built a handsome tomb in Greenwood Cemetery. He expended a great deal of money upon it, and it naturally became one of the attractions of that pensive resort. Among the eccentricities of the veteran manager was that of visiting this tomb on sultry summer afternoons, and sitting there, novel in hand, until the shadowing of the grand path before the door showed him that evening was near. One day Mr Niblo passed through the lodge gate as usual, saluted the attendant in his customary courtly style, and wandered away.

That night Mr Niblo did not return to his home in this city. Nothing was thought of it as he had such a number of friends whom he might visit and remain until late, but when the morning showed the room unoccupied and the bed undisturbed, then alarm seized the household. Search was made: the clubs, the places of public resort, the theatres—all were visited. He had not been there the night previous. Then one remembered the visits to the Greenwood tomb.

When those who were searching for William Niblo reached the gate of the cemetery they were met by the man in charge. He remembered that Niblo had been there so many days before that it had become a custom. What was the matter? Mr Niblo lost? "Come to think of it. I didn't see him go out of here when I locked up. He must be in the tomb."

The tomb has an ornamental door let into the solid rock surroundings. It is massive, thick, uninviting—and seems just the aperture for a perpetual home of the dead. Beyond it is an airy apartment, in which the sunlight filters. When Mr William Niblo entered his favorite resting place that summer afternoon so long ago, he sat in his accustomed seat, opened his book and fell to reading. The wind rose, the vault was filled with air until a propulsive force was generated, and then suddenly there came a short, sharp click, with semi-darkness after it. Mr Niblo was shut in. The vault door had sprung to.

He was found sitting composed in the tomb, and by no means so much agitated as was any one of those who were looking for him. He explained the accident, his shrieks for assistance, and then the relapse into a calm and philosophical consideration of the circumstances. He knew that no one could hear him call, but he felt that the active brains of his friends would seek him out, and that sooner or later he would be liberated.

[Columbia Register.]
The Two Orators

Now of South Carolina are O'Connor and Youmans. The first is a candidate for Congress from the old Charleston district, and the other is the Attorney General of the State. The eloquence of the one is like sheet lightning on a summer evening playing amid the clouds; and that of the other like the aurora borealis shooting its corruscations up toward the zenith. Both, we believe, read law under the direction of the late Edmund Rhett. Both are of about the same age and in the prime of life. The one a few years ago electrified a National Democratic convention, and the other has lately carried away a Boston audience. Both are from the old district of Beaufort—the one from the salt marshes and the other from the pine hills. They are both well educated; the one being a graduate of St Mary's College, Maryland, and the other a graduate of the South Carolina College. Both have a wonderful command of language, and both are gifted with great power of memory. Both were true to the State in the day of her agony, and each is now reaping his "well done."
