They come! they come! Uprising from the salty wave. Descending from the mountain top, Energing from the Mammoth Cave, Perspiring from the hotel hop-Glad to get home !

They come! they come!
From skimped and scan ty rural fare,
From toils and pains that pass for fun,
From where malaria loads the air, And where all night from sun to sun Mosquitoes hum.

They come! they come! From where the mountains lift their heads, Until their tops the clouds eclipse, From sombre lakes in tranquil beds, Pine fragrance on their hair and lips,

They come! they come! From forests wild and deserts waste, From summer maunts beside the sea; From shrines of fashion, wealth and taste, With talk that makes us long to be Among the dumb

They come! they come! One of a thousand fishers fair, With tempting bait of charming eyes,
Has caught and gaffed her fish with care,
And brings a husband as a prize— One worth a plum.

They come! they come! On reefs of rail the billows break, And Saratogas strew the way, And homeward now their course they take, And fathers, while the bills they pay, Grow grim and grum.

They come! they come! They fly like clouds of autumn leaves,

Or swallows when the day is wet,

And bring to us their summer sheaves

Of health and pain, of joy and debt-Tis so with some. They come! they come! In sadness some, and some in smiles, To pleasant homes and busy shops.
To daily toils and latest styles,
To concerts, theatres and hors—
Glad to get home!

REDMOND THE MOONSHINER.

The Conflict Between the United States Courts and reighborhood.

From time immemorial these mountaineers have been Union men. They owned no slaves, and, on all the Federal issues which have passed over the State, sided with the national government, until the late war carried them into the Southern army with their neighbors and their State. There was, therefore, no hostility to the gener.

The mount through the day and fitted the ends together at night. The "Gilded Age" sold rapidly and, true to Warner's prophetic instincts, Col Sellers put in his appearance to demand satisfaction—money or a law suit. Col Sellers went home with $2,000 in his pocket and a promise from the authors that Beriah should be substituted for the reference of the color of th al government mingled in their opposition to the revenue laws.

Before the war these people paid little or no taxes. Their tax receipts at their little farms ran from 25 to to cents. They made enough wheat, cotton, tobacco, sor hum, and vegetables for home consumption. Their general crop was corn. This was too bulky to haul from their little coves across the ridges, along the bridle paths which served for public roads. The government did not and could not, provide them with highways. They were obliged, therefore, to reduce the bulk of their marketable produce in order to sell it and obtain supplies other than those raised at home. Each family, as far as the memory of man runs back, had its little copper still in which each winter they distilled their corn into whiskey. The pure freestone water from the copper still in which each winter they distilled their corn into whiskey. The pure freestone water from the granite hills, with the white flint corn mash, thus made the purest liquor sold in America. This was barrelled up, and often rolled by hand for miles down the declivities of the mountains until they came to the market roads. Thence it was either peddled in wagons or sold in bulk at the various county towns of the State. One hundred dollars as the cash result of a year's labor was an aristocratic several years passed. He was sitting income among these primitive people. During the war the United States lady, very elegant and of middle age, government saw proper to impose a heavy tax upon distillers. Thirty dol-

ed. None but large manufactories could comply with these requirements, and it drove all the small distillers out of the field or into illicit distillers. "What has he to say to me?" "He says he was innocent of that crime, though guilty of others deserving punishment." "Can he repeat any ments, and it drove all the small distillers out of the field or into illicit distillation.

After the war, when the mountaineers returned home, they resumed their old mode of life. Many of them poor were forced to work, and yet restrained from the only work they could do by his agreeable society would be considered the Federal government. Driven the Federal government. Driven by actual necessity, very many of them continued their business. This gave continued their business. This gave continued was as wide as an ordinary express wagon.

Of the several newspaper men who have fallen yictims of the fever, one is Major Nat Burbanks, the humorist of the New Orleans Picayune, one of the brightest men of the Southern press. tools. The revenue officers were generally men identified with the State Republican party. In the discharge of their duties they were exacting, tyran-nical, and often cruel. The conse-quence was an inveterate hatred between them and the victims. Instead of being called "internal," they were styled "infernal revenue officers," and to cheat them in any way was considered a duty resting upon each loyal mountaineer. When young Ladd was killed by mistake, under circumstances which would not have justified the killing of Redmond, for whom he was mistaken, a howl of indignation rose from the Blue Ridge which drove the murderer to take refuge in Greenville jail for fear of summary vengeance.

It is stated that Chief Justice Waite,
Circuit Judge Bond, and District Judge Bryan will hold the court before which he is to be tried. But as there is no

"I think you might do worse," said Gen Butler to the people of Massachusetts, "than to elect me Governor." It is certainly not impossible that they might do worse, but it is very improbable that they ever will.—Courier-Journal.

We don't pretend to know much about sgriculture, and far be it from us to attempt to make suggestions to an agricultural paper, and yet we may perhaps be permitted to remark that it seems to us that the department in the country journal entitled "The Fireside" would smell as sweet by a cooler name these August days.—Albany Evening Journal.

An exchange tells us that "Mrs Sarah Thompson, of Clover Grove, N. C., has borne her husband—a delicate man of 120 pounds' weight—twenty consecutive children in twenty consecutive years." The State of North Carolina ought to award Mrs Thompson a pension, and let her stop and the is to be tried. But as there is no statute against murder the trial will be a farce. The prisoner cannot again be tried in a State court, and the blood of young Ladd will cry in vain from the lintels of his door posts on the Blue Ridge Mountains.

Last week the two Hinkles, beardless boys, who were with Redmond when he raided the revenue officers, recaptured the property they had taken from him, and released a prison-er, were tried and convicted in the district court at Greenville. It was supposed that Redmond would come forward and surrender himself for trial along with the Hinkle boys; but he did not come. It is not likely that he will now yoluntarily surrender to a government which punishes his friends and protects their murderers, Nor is it likely that this course will pacify the mountaineers. Gov Hampton has been their friendly summer neighbor for the first would make the property they had taken from him, and released a prison-er, were tried and convicted in the district court at Greenville.
