THE MONEYLESS MAN.

HENRY STANTON.

Is there no place on the face of the earth Where charity dwelleth, where virtue has birth?
Where beams in kindness and mercy will leave And the poor and the wretched may ask and receive?
Is there no place on earth where a knock from the poor
Will bring a kind angel to open the door?
Ah! I search the wide world wherever you can,
There is no open door for the moneyless man.

Go look in the hall where the chandelier light Drives off with its splendor the darkness of night;
Where the rich hanging velvet, in shadowy fold, Sweeps gracefully down, with its trimming of gold, And mirrors of silver take up and renew in long lighted vistas the widening view; Go there in your patches, and find if you can,
A welcoming smile for the moneyless man.

Go look in your church of the cloud-reaching spire,
Which gives back to the sun his same look of fire,
Where the arches and columns are gorgeous within,
And the walls seem as pure as a soul without sin;
Go down the long aisle—see the rich and the poor,
In the pomp and the pride of their worldly estate;
Walk down in your patches, and find if you can,
Who opens a pew for the moneyless man.

Go look to your judges in dark flowing gown,
With the scales wherein law weighs quietly down;
Where he frowns on the weak and smiles on the strong,
And punishes right while he justifies wrong; Where jurors their lips on the bib's have laid,
To render a verdict they've already made;
Go there in the court room, and find if you can,
Any law for the case of a moneyless man.

Go look in the banks, where Mammon has told His hundreds and thousands of silver and gold, Where, safe from the hands of the starving and poor,
Lies pile upon pile of the glittering ore; Walk up to the counter—ah, there you may stay, Till your limbs have grown old and your hair turns gray,
And you'll find at the bank not one of the clerk
With money to lend to a moneyless man.

Then go to your hotel—no raven has fed The wife who has suffered so long for her bread, Kneel down by her pallet and kiss the death front;
From the lips of the angel your poverty lost—
Then turn in your agony upward to God, And bless while it smites you the chastening rod,
And you'll find at the end of your life's little span There's a welcome above for the moneyless man.

Hawkeye: "Why does lightning so rarely strike twice in the same place?" Professor Wortman asked the new boy in the class in natural philosophy. "But," said the new boy, "it never needs to." And it is a little singular that nobody had thought of that reason before.

The little Paul, aged eight, passes the day at his uncle's. "Ah, my uncle," says the child, "why didn't you tell me this morning that there was going to be a picnic for the whole family?" "But," said the uncle, "it was all right, wasn't it?" "Yes," replied the child, "but I couldn't have expected it all day, could I?"

It is recorded that the Prince of Wales's eyes are gradually becoming busier and busier. When he is not at the races, he is employed by violent disputation, it is simply an heirloom of the Guelph family. Albert Edward is in every way, a reformed man, which is only right for one blessed with five nice children.

"This country," remarked a traveler in Northwestern Iowa, "settles up very rapidly."
"Yes," replied the native, nervously watching the movements of a constable dodging about the other side of the field, "country settles up a darn sight faster than the people do." And before the traveler could ask him to explain he was making a mile a minute across the tracky prairie, with the constable a bad second.—Haw-

A Panther Killed in Alexander County.
[Stateville American.]
We learn by a note from Miss Mary J. Brown, of Stony Point, Alexander county, that a genuine panther was killed on the 6th of June, which measured four feet from tip to tip. The animal was caught by Wm. L. Brown, a son of John M. Brown, with the assistance of a dog in Elk Shoal creek, near the road leading from Charlotte to Wilkesboro, six miles south of Taylorsville. But for the dog the gentleman would have had a fearful fight, he being weak and of small stature, but he and the dog had pluck to back him.

LETTER FROM NEW ORLEANS.

A Sad Picture of Affairs in the Crescent City.

NEW ORLEANS, September 4.—New Orleans is in the gloom of the shadows of death. Bronze John, that dread phantom of the South, is stalking in the air. We have not been afflicted, fortunately, as have the people of Grenada, or possibly of either Vicksburg or Memphis. The proportionate death rates have certainly been largely in our favor. How long they may so continue remains to be seen.
The fever with us has unquestionably been largely curbed by the liberal and somewhat systematic use of disinfectants. It has for the same reason undoubtedly been made to assume a less malignant type than is elsewhere experienced. The fever is bad enough, none the less, as seen here in New Orleans. A large proportion of the cases are never reported. Our creoles have their peculiar notions of treatment.
Their sick, unless dangerous, are kept to themselves. The scourge is everywhere and in epidemic form. Business of every kind may be said to be suspended. The business houses are open, it is true, and men still put in an appearance sometimes in their offices and upon 'Change. All might as well be closed, however, were it not for the mere matter of appearances. See it be in the way of actual daily necessities, there cannot be said to be a showing even that looks like trade.

BUSINESS AT A STANDSTILL Canal street, the Broadway of New Orleans, is the only thoroughfare that presents anything like the appearance of life. Even here the showing at its best is sombre enough. It is much as though shadowed with a veritable pall.
The large and fashionable stores are almost wholly bereft of their customers.
The few remaining clerks are dejected, listlessly about, gloomy and lounging, and sadly in want of something to do.
There is no fashionable crowd, nobody in want of fastidious goods.
The throngs of well dressed ladies have all disappeared. There have given place to women singly or in couples.
The women are sober and thoughtful; they are almost invariably in plain attire, and far too frequently, alas! they are seen in mourning. They are upon the street evidently because of a necessity rather than for the choice they may want a few articles of need, possibly something in black. The men are neither in crowds nor in a hurry.
There are no longer any groups of idlers at the street corners. Everyone that is able, seemingly, carries an umbrella. It is not that the air is hot; it is, on the contrary, decidedly cool.
There is, none the less, a scorching sun. There are also frequent and dashing showers. One has a dread of getting wet. The umbrella is raised at every crossing. There is no jostling, no loud talking, no show of any bustle.

STAGNATION AND GLOOM.

The people—they are but few and scattered in most—pass along soberly and quietly. The street is the general center for all of the various lines of street cars. Everybody, from no matter what part of the city, is put off here. No one thinks just now of walking who can pay for a ride. The cars without have but few passengers.
They come and go with their accustomed regularity, but they come and go comparatively empty. The people, it is evident, save of a stern necessity, remain at home. They are not to be seen most certainly, even upon Canal street. Here is the one avenue of all others, too, for the fashionable drives.
There are none of the usual fancy turnouts to be met. There can be no driving for pleasure under the shadows of pestilence. The one thing which casts the final gloom is the appearance of the long and well nigh continuous lines of funeral processions. Canal street is the thoroughfare leading to the principal city cemeteries. From the turnings at the various cross streets the dread calvados of death are almost constantly filing in. They turn the corners from almost every quarter; they wind their long and sinuous way —the silent march of the dead—so many shadowy spectres, beckoning all in their train. Everyone looks instinctively, with bated breath; everyone sees and recognizes the token; everyone asks of himself, whose turn next?

The night settles down with an unaccountable gloom. The streets at an early hour are almost entirely deserted.
The air is peculiarly heavy and close.
One recognizes it as fairly loaded with malaria poison. Nobody cares to be out that can well avoid it. One may walk as early as 8 o'clock upon any of the principal thoroughfares other than Canal street for a dozen squares and not meet a single soul save the policeman on his rounds. The doors and window shutters at even this early hour are carefully closed.

God only knows where it all may end, who may live to tell the tale.
By far the worst we fear has yet to come. There can be no change for the better until after a frost, and the air meantime must become necessarily but the more and more laden with the dread infection. The mental and physical strain, too, becomes the more and more unbearable from day to day.
The onward march is thus terribly and coostantly strained must give way at last.
Those that have held up, that have fought the dread disease with the stout-est hearts, that have aided the dying and cared for the dead, must sooner or later be forced to succumb. With the continuance of the epidemic, week after week, there must fall a heavier and heavier burden upon the shoulders of nobler and true men than those organized under the Howard Association do not live. I know of the horrors of this terrible scourge as under my own eyes, and I know of my own knowledge of their work in hand. They are doing it with nobleness and fearles-ness that commends itself to a Christian people. They deserve and have need of all aid and more than all the encouragement and aid they may secure.
The Peabody Association, too, must needs care for the convalescents; for the starving thousands; and want and famine, as all know, must follow in the wake of a pestilence. May God aid them one and all!
