CARPETS,

Of all grades and qualities,

Ranging in Price from 25 cents to $2 and upwards.

This large assortment, including Beautiful Brussels, which outstrips the pretentious stocks of even large cities, is not to be met with in Retail Carpet stores this side of New York or Boston, is now to be seen at our store.

WE HAVE COMPLETED ARRANGEMENTS

With one of the finest carpet houses in New York, so that we can show you, as it were, at your own door, a New York Wholesale stock, which is done through the medium of a Wonderful Invention.

RICHARDSON'S

CARPET EXHIBITOR.

This wonderful piece of ingenuity

Is so arranged that we can show from half a yard sample, as it were, a Thousand Yards, or in other words, it multiplies the sample a thousand times, matching it perfectly and making it appear just as it would made up and nailed upon the floor, and shows it better than when rolled out the old way. This gives all the opportunity of selecting from a great variety of New and Choice Patterns.

We shall be continually supplied from our N. Y. Wholesale House with all the new styles and varieties which no merchant would be able to carry in stock.

Thus relieved of this burden, having no interest or money invested, no remnants to take off profits, no old stock or unsaleable patterns left as permanent investments, we can afford to send and get you any style or pattern you may select without extra charge, and cheaper than you could buy the same were you in New York yourself.

We have entered on this enterprise not from selfish motives alone. We consider when we offer in this vicinity a stock of Carpets to make purchase from, such as they could not meet with in any retail store short of the largest cities, and propose selling them at very low figures, that we have done them such a kindness we are fain to believe it will not go unappreciated. So make the exact measurement of your room, and we will pledge ourselves to suit you in pattern, quality and price, and furnish you the carpet in the shortest possible notice.

Carpets cut to fit the room, and made up if desired. Very Respectfully Yours,

ALEXANDER & HARRIS,

A Woman's Death Wound.

[From "A Masque of Poets."]

It left upon her tender flesh no trace.
The murderer is safe. As swift as light
The weapon fell, and, in the summer night,
Did scarce the silent dewy air displace.
'Twas but a word. A blow had been less base.
Like dumb beast branded by an iron white
With heat she turned in blind and helpless flight,
But then remembered, and with piteous face
Came back.

Since then the world has nothing missed
In her in voice or smile. But she—each day
She counts until her dying be complete.
One moan she makes, and ever doth repeat
"Oh lips which I had loved and kissed and kissed,
Did I deserve to die this bitterest way?"

OBSERVATIONS.

There are three things that no man can keep—a point on a pencil, a pointed joke, and an appointment with the dentist. There are three things which all men borrow—postage stamps, cigarettes, and car tickets. There are three things no woman can do—cross before a horse, hurry for a horse-car, and understand the difference between ten minutes and half an hour.—Harvard Lampoon.

There is on exhibition in a New York Fifth avenue window an elaborate pyramid, crowned by a Goddess of Liberty, and with numerous compartments, in which are placed colored candy figures, arranged to illustrate American historic events. It was made entirely by hand and is valued at $1,800. We may now expect to hear a St. Louis humorist observe that this candy pyramid would be a nice piece of confection to put into a Chicago belle's stocking.—Brooklyn Herald.

A woman usually carries her purse in her hand in order to be sure she will not lose it. And, somehow, she never remembers, until after she has the whole police force looking for the purse and an advertisement in the paper offering a reward for its return and no questions asked, that she laid it down on a counter in a dry-goods store while she stepped to the shawl department to see if another woman's new dress was really new or an old one fixed over.—Keck's Kit Kon.

THE PEDDLER'S STORY.

A cold winter's night, several years since, found a stage load of passengers gathered together around a warm fire of a tavern bar-room in a New England village. Shortly after we arrived, a peddler drove up and ordered that his horse should be stabled for the night.

After we had eaten supper, we repaired to the bar-room, where the conversation flowed freely. Several anecdotes had been related, and finally the peddler was asked to give us a story, as men of his profession were generally full of adventures and anecdotes. He was a short, thick-set man, somewhere about 40 years of age, and gave evidence of great physical strength. He gave his name as Lemuel Vinney, and said his home was in Dover, New Hampshire.

"Well, gentlemen," he commenced, knocking the ashes from his pipe, and putting it in his pocket, "suppose I tell you about the last thing of any consequence that happened to me?" You see I am now right from the West, and on my way home for winter quarters. It was during the early part of last spring, one pleasant evening, that I pulled up at the door of a small village tavern in Hancock county, Indiana. I said it was pleasant—I meant warm. I went in and called for supper and had my horse taken care of. After I had eaten I sat down in the bar-room. It began to rain about 8 o'clock, and it was very dark out doors. Now I wanted to be in Jackson the next morning, for I expected a load of goods there for me which I intended to dispose of on my way home.

"The moon would rise about midnight, and I knew if it did not rain I could get along through the mud very well after that. So I asked the landlord if he would see that my horse was fed about midnight, as I wished to be off at about 2. He expressed some surprise at this, and asked me why I did not stop for breakfast. I told him that I had sold my last load about out, and that a new lot of goods was waiting for me at Jackson, and I wanted to be there before the express agent left in the morning.

"There were a number of persons sitting round while I told this, but I took little notice of them; only one arrested my attention. I had seen that week notices for the detection of a notorious robber. The bills gave a description of his person, and the man before me answered very well to it. He was a tall, well-formed man, rather slight in frame, and had the appearance of a gentleman, save that his face bore those hard, cruel marks which an observing man cannot mistake for anything but the index of a villainous disposition.

"When I went to my chamber I asked the landlord who that man was, describing the individual. He had come that afternoon and intended to leave the next day. The host asked me why I wished to know, and I simply told him that the man's countenance was familiar, and I merely wished to know if I ever was acquainted with him.

"I was resolved not to let the landlord in the secret, but to give information to the sheriff, and perhaps he might reach the inn before the villain left, for I had no doubts with regard to his identity.

"I had an alarm watch, and having set it to give the alarm at 1 o'clock, I went to sleep. I was aroused at the proper time, and immediately arose and dressed myself. When I reached the yard I found the clouds all passed away, and the moon was shining brightly. The hostler was easily aroused, and by 2 o'clock I was on the road. The mud was deep, and my horse, could not travel very fast. However, on we went, and in the course of half an hour I was clear of the village. At a short distance ahead lay a large tract of forest, mostly of great pine. The road lay directly through the wood, and, as near as I can remember, the distance was twelve miles. Yet the moon was in the East and the road ran nearly West, so I thought I should get light enough.

"I had entered this wood and gone about half a mile, when my wagon wheels settled with a jump and jerk into a deep hole. I uttered an exclamation of astonishment, but that was not all. I heard another exclamation from some source. What could it be?—I looked quietly around but could see nothing, yet I knew the sound that I heard was very close to me. As the mind wheels came up I felt something besides the jerk from the hole. I heard something tumble from one side to the other of my wagon, and I could also feel the jar occasioned by the movement. It was simply a man in my cart! I knew this on the instant. Of course I felt puzzled. At first I imagined that somebody had taken this method to obtain a ride. My next idea was that somebody had got in to sleep there, but this passed away as soon as it came, for no man would have broken my cart for that purpose. And that thought gentlemen, opened my eyes. Whoever was there had broken in. My next thought was of the suspicious individual I had seen at that tavern. He heard me say that my load was all sold out, and of course he supposed I had money with me. In this he was right, for I had over two thousand dollars. I thought he meant to leave the cart when he supposed I had reached a safe place, and then creep over and shoot me, or knock me down. All this passed through my mind by the time I had got a rod from the hole.

"In a few moments my horse was knee-deep in the mud, and I knew I could slip off without noise. So I drew my pistol, and having twined the reins about the whip-stock, carefully slipped down in the mud, and as the cart passed on I went behind and examined the hasp. The door of the cart lets down and is fastened by a hasp, which slips over the staple and is then secured by a padlock. The padlock was gone, and the hasp was secured in its own place by a bit of pine, so that a slight force from within could break it. My wheel wrench stood in a leather pocket on the side of the cart, and I quickly took it out and slipped it into the staple, the iron handle just sliding down.

"Now I had him. My cart was almost new, made of a stout frame of white oak, and made on purpose for hard use. I did not believe any ordinary mortal could break out. I got on to my cart as noiselessly as I got off, and then urged my horse on, still keeping my pistol handy. I knew I should come to a hard road, and so I allowed my horse to pick his own way through the mud.

"About ten minutes after this I heard a motion in the cart, followed by a grinding noise, as though some heavy force was being applied to the door. I said nothing, but the idea struck me that the villain might judge where I sat, and shoot up through the top of the cart at me; so I sat down on the footboard.

"Of course I knew my unexpected passenger was a villian, for he must have been awake ever since I started, and nothing in the world but absolute villainy would have caused him to remain quiet so long, and then start up in this particular place. The thumping and pushing grew louder, and pretty soon I heard a human voice.

"'Let me out of this,' he yelled pretty loud.

"I lifted my head to make him think I was in my usual place, and then asked him what he was doing there.

"'Let me out and I will tell you,' he replied.

"'Tell me what you are in there for.'

"'I got in here to sleep on the rags,' he answered.

"'How did you get in?' I asked.

"'Let me out or I'll shoot you through the head.'

"Just at that moment my horse's feet struck the hard road, and I knew that the rest of the route to Jackson would be good going, the distance of twelve miles. I slipped back on the foot-board and took the whip. In fifteen minutes we cleared the wood, and away we went at a keen jump. The chap inside kept yelling to get out.

"Finally he stopped, and in a few moments came the report of a pistol—one—two—three—four, one right after the other. I heard the balls whiz over my head. If I had been on my seat, one of these balls, if not two, would have gone through me. I popped up my head again, and gave a yell, and then I said:

"'O God save me!—I'm a dead man!'

"Then I made a shuffling, as though I was falling off, and finally settled down on the foot-board again. I now urged up the old mare by giving her an occasional poke with my whip-stock, and she peeled faster than ever.

"The man called out to me twice more pretty soon after this, and as he got no reply he made some tremendous efforts to break the door open, and as this failed him, he made several attempts on the top. But I had no fear of his doing anything there, for the top of the cart is framed with dovetails, and each sleeper bolted to the posts with iron bolts. I had made it so I could carry loads there. By and by, after all else failed, the scamp commenced to holler 'whoa' to the horse, and kept it up until he became hoarse. All this time I kept perfectly quiet, holding the reins firmly, and kept poking the beast with the stock. We were not an hour going that dozen miles—not a bit of it. I hadn't much fear—perhaps, I might tell the truth, and say I had none, for I had a good pistol, and, more than that, my passenger was safe; yet I was glad when I came to the old flour-barrel factory that stands at the end of Jackson, and in ten minutes more hauled up in front of the tavern, where I found a couple of men in the barn engaged in cleaning down some stage horses.

"'Well, old fellow,' said I, as I got down and went to the back of the wagon, 'you have had a good ride, haven't you?'

"'Who are you?' he cried, and he swore as he asked the question.

"'I am the man you tried to shoot,' was the reply.

"'Where am I? Let me out.'

"'Look here; we've come to a safe stopping place, and, mind you, my pistol is ready for you the moment you show yourself. Now lie quiet.'

"By this time the two hostlers had come to see what was the matter, and I explained the case. After this I got one of them to run and rout the sheriff, and tell him what I believed I'd got for him. The first streaks of daylight were just coming up, and in half an hour it would be broad daylight. I told him the whole affair in a few words and then made for the cart. He told the chap inside who he was, and if he made the least resistance he'd be a dead man. I then slipped the wrench out, and as I let the door down the fellow made a spring. I caught him by the ankle and he came down on his face, and the moment I saw the chap I recognized him. He was marched to the lock up, and I told the sheriff I should remain in town all day.

"After breakfast the sheriff came down to the tavern and told me that I had caught the very bird, and if I would remain until the next morning I should have the reward of two hundred dollars which had been offered.

"I found my goods all safe, paid the express agent for bringing them from Indianapolis, and then went to work to stow them away in my cart. The bullet holes were found in the top of the vehicle just as I expected. They were in a line about five inches apart, and had I been where I usually sit, two of them must have hit me somewhere about the small of the back and passed upward, for they were sent with heavy charges of powder, and his pistols were heavy ones.

"On the next morning the sheriff called upon me and paid me two hundred dollars in gold, for he had made himself sure that he had got the right villain.

"I afterward found a letter in the post-office at Portsmouth for me, from the sheriff of Hancock county, informing me that the fellow who had tried to kill and rob me was in prison for life."

The return of General Beauregard, of Louisiana, to his home in New Orleans, is announced; also that he is accompanied by his brother-in-arms, the redoubtable John B. Hood, of Virginia, and daily the two old soldiers are seen hand in hand, from early morn to late eve, together, canvassing the merits of the Extraordinary Grand Drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery, which takes place on Tuesday, December 10th. Last June a merchant in New Orleans got the $100,000, which is the capital prize. The reader who sends ten dollars to M. A. Dauphin, P. O. Box 692, New Orleans, may get it this drawing. Who knows?
