The Teken.

R. H. STODDARD. Clad in purple, he sat in his palace, A powerful king in the days of old; They brought him wine in a beautiful chalice,

Whose gems were crusted in beaten gold. "Who hath jewels like mine?" demanded
The boastful mondrch; and straightway then.
Through his men-at-arms, who at once disbanded

Came one, who looked like the Man of men. He came in proudly, and held up a jewel, Held it with both hands over his head; Its light was lovely, its light was cruel; But cruel or lovely, the light was red.

It shot out sparkles; it was a Glory,
A terrible Splendor, a heart of Fire;
No one light like it, in song or story.
For who had that had his soul's desire!

Its brightness shone over land and ocean, Far-reaching—a dazzling, blinding light; Creating wonder and strange devotion. A sense of Love, and the sense of Might.

"Who hath jewels like thine?" demanded
This Man of men. "Look at my great gem!
It grew where the rivers are golden-sanded,
With others—it does not compare with them!

"I say to thee, monarch, it is a token Of the Masters, that ever on earth remain; And if by chance any part is broken. It is nothing less, but is whole again."

Thus in Gallic Latin—your Southey will show it— Two hundred and fifty years ago, Wrote the great de Thou of an early poet; But what the meaning, he did not know. I know his secret, without his learning; I have divined it by my deep art; It is only dark to the undiscerning-This parable of the Poet's Heart

OBSERVATIONS.

The Rome Sentined thinks a healthy Indian is a well red man. The Saturday Review says that it is not alone the genteel fashionable daughters of lodging house keepers, but lady novelists as well, who say "be-tween you and I." Empress Eugenie is pale, anxious and faded, and Olive Logan guesses that she wears a wig her hair is so purely blonde; and Olive calls Louis a rosebud of a young fellow.

An obliging spirit prompted the Jersey farmer who but a two-pound whet-stone in every turkey he sent to the New York markets. He knew the buyers would find the stones indispensable when it came to carving the fowls.

He became insane, and killed him-self. His widow sued for the $5,000 on the ground that, being driven to self slaughter by insanity, a disease, does not constitute a violation of the suicide clause, which can be applied to criminal self-destruction only. The Minnesota Supreme Court decided for the widow.

A story comes from Milan of a highly conscientious barber who fied from temptation. He had been called to shave an eminent capitalist in his own house. After scraping the millionaire's chin for awhile, the barber suddenly threw down his razor and ran out of the room. Being pursued, and an explanation demanded, he said: "The sight of the gold was too much for me. If I had not run away I should have cut the rich man's throat and robbed him." The gentleman who escaped this sad fate was so grateful that he presented to the barber the sum of 100 francs.

LETTER FROM CAPT. NATT ATKINSON.

How the People Need Relief and What He has Done for Them.

NEAR ASHEVILLE, N. C., March 21, 1879.

To the Editor of The Observer:-I have just seen a clipping from your paper, in which you make reference to the remark made by Capt. Ardrey just before the adjournment, that my retrenchment had cost the State more than it come to, and you add, "the facts show this to be so," or words to that effect. Whatever may be your ignorance of the matter referred to, it is very certain that Capt. Ardrey knew to the contrary of what he asserted. His remark was made in the heat of debate, and if I am not greatly mistaken in the man, he was sorry the next day to see his assertion in print, as he was well informed of the fact that the committee which had the honor of raising had made the following savings to the State, to-$171,000 I do not object to any fair criticism of my course in the Legislature by you or any one else, but of reckless assertion, without any proof or statement of facts, to my detriment, I think I may justly complain, and therefore ask your publication of this. As an humble representative I did what I believed to be to the best interest of the State. I doubtless made mistakes, (as most men do,) but one thing I was determined upon, and that was this: that my mistakes, if any, should be in favor of the overburdened taxpayers of the State. I know, and have felt as keenly as any man in the State, the hardships to which the poor man has been subjected since the war, and I was determined, regardless of the sneers and threats of public officials, to do my utmost for his relief. That I, and those who co-operated with me, did something very materially in this way is well known throughout the State. If all who went to Ral- "Blower" Brown's style faithfully reeigh in favor of retrenchment and re- produced, and as these men have done form had had the firmness to hold out grand things under this method, Rowto the end, our State taxes would have ell's little trot may be accepted "as good

While I censure no one for his course or vote, and concede to all that honesty of purpose which I claim for myself, it is too well known to admit of denial that the influences that hover around Raleigh during the sessions of the Legislature is often of such character as to work very radical changes in the convictions of many representatives. Many with souls as ardent in their devotion to the interests of the dear people (during the campaign) as was Peter's in the cause of his Master, under different influences and surroundings are ready, like him, to swear they never knew them. In my opinion it will be well for North Carolina when she sends more men to the Legislature with cast iron wills to stand up there, as well as at home, and contend for the right, regardless of the softening influences that may be brought to bear against them.

The Swiss and the Piedmont Country.

NATT ATKINSON.

[Southern Herald.] The Swiss colonists are taking root in the Piedmont belt of the South. Already two settlements have been made, one in North Georgia and the other in Western North Carolina. The men forming these colonies are men of means and intelligence, possessing fine business qualifications; and with their extensive acquaintance—being representative men in Switzerland-they BALTIMORE, March 23.—Mrs. Mary Kirchner, a good-looking woman of 40, sands of their countrymen to them in was taken to the city jail to-day to be tried for an assault with vitriol on John numbers of families in Switzerland are Schlereth. It swiftly glided from its seat and placed its powerful grasp upon the coat collar of the attorney for Mr. Webster. There was a momentary void in the understanding of that gentleman. The morning stars began to sing together in his ears and danced before his confused vision. Then he found himself outside the building without any hat and the dusty zephyrs playing through his luxurious moustache. Parties present in the room as innocent spectators aver that the feet of the attorney for Mr. Webster did not touch the floor after the muscles of the hand of the court had contracted upon his collar.

Rowell's Short Stride.

[New York Herald Communication.] Rowell's compact form is admirably suited to his task. His legs are superbly built for endurance, and his chest is feep, with abundance of play for his lungs. His digestion-the first requisite in an undertaking such as this one -is simply perfect, and he acquires strength and replaces sleep with hearty meals, which he partakes of frequently. His style has been criticised freely and severely, and we would say just here to his critics, who complain of his short stride, that it is well suited to the man's height and best adapted alike to his speed and endurance. We have seen Corkey and "Blower" Brown in their long-distance matches in London, and both the one and the other acquired their great records by much such a a step. Corkey's stride is somewhat longer than Rowell's, but the man's legs are longer in proportion to his height. In seeing Rowell running around at his dog trot in Gilmore's you have seen
