Travelling in Three.

I care not what may come, Though, dashing, swiftly, The waters whelm me in their foam.

What though the coming years, Are looming hopelessly, Fill my heart with anxious fears?

I'll bear the heavy load, And near it patiently, Kissing the hand that wields the rod.

To wait on Thee, my Lord, And hope continually, To green, with faith, Thy gracious word.

For still, I somewhat fear, I'll be distressed, Forgetting, when the storm I hear.

To trust in Thee.

Mr. Rogers should shake his clothes and see if he hasn't misplaced one of Mr. Hayes's valuable votes.—Atlanta Constitution.

Mrs. Oates has formally announced herself as Mrs. Watkins. She now select another husband at leisure.—Atlanta Constitution.

There is wonderful vitality in Republican forms of government, says the New Orleans Picayune. If it were not so, they could have been talked to death long ago.—Boston Advertiser.

Andrew Jackson Hickenlooper and the Hon. American Vespucius Rice are candidates for lieutenant-governor of Ohio when the smaller members of the State print the names in full they issue supplements.

They used to consider Ananias quite an able liar, but they were a rude, uncultured people then, and the Louisiana witness had not sprung grandly into being.

If Grant had not made a lively use of the pardoning power during his last year in office, the excursion which goes to San Francisco to welcome him would be pretty much a failure.

The strawberry season is nearly over, and the church that hasn't yet cleared off its debt will have to struggle along until it is again fashionable to sip a quart of liquid and one oyster in an oyster stew.

"I could sing," said an old Chicago class-leader, the other evening, "if forty thousand saw-mills were running full time in the same block, and they couldn't put me out."—"No," replied a musician nearby, "but you might put the saw-mills out."

The play was at its height in the card room of a well known club, and from a distant corner was heard, "We are two to two."—"By Jove, we are two to two too!" responded a player at an adjoining table. No woman there present seemed to understand our language to a French horn.—Judy.

A poem in an exchange starts off with, "This is the June," as Dick Deadege would say, this is "important information." The man who was laboring under the impression that it was the first week in January, will be gratified to learn that it is the month of roses, carnations, porgies, golden wheat fields, wormy cherries, and other vernal and infernal things.—Narrator's Herald.

STATE NEWS.

Catawba hogs are dying of the cholera.

Raleigh has 54 miles of streets, 95 public pumps, and 14 public cisterns.

On the 1st of October next a new mail route will be opened from Newton to Lincolnton.

The Visitor says there is more money in circulation in Raleigh now than there has been for three or four years.

A man named Coffin, a citizen of northern Ireland, has lost five children in the space of a week, of diphtheria.

The Piedmont Press says the barn and stables of Mr. Henry Brinkley, of Glen Alpine Station, more prominently known as Turkey Tail, were consumed by fire last Thursday night, June 19th. The buildings were very good, and will be a heavy loss to Mr. Brinkley.

The Visitor says Prof. Kerr has just returned to Raleigh, bringing with him from the mountains a spreading adder which has been corked up in a bottle for over three weeks, has lived without air, food, or water, and still is as lively and ready to bite as ever.

Wilmington Star: There seems to be a very general desire, especially in military circles, to see the old Duplin Rifles re-organized. This company was carried into service in 1861 by the gallant Capt. Thos. S. Kenan, the present Attorney General of the State.

The Wilmington Review says a large rattlesnake was killed on Cypress creek, in Pender county, near Mr. G. W. Malpass' store, on Friday last. It was a highly respected citizen residing about three miles from town, had died at 4 o'clock. Mr. Palmer was taken sick in the field the day before, no doubt from the effects of the sun, and went to his residence at dinner time, telling his family that he was feeling quite unwell, and laid down, and after a few hours of intense suffering death came to his relief.

When the funeral procession of Mr. Palmer was about to start from the house, it was met by Mrs. Kelly, an estimable lady, aged about 62 years, who a few moments before appeared in usual good health and had been actively assisting the family, and who dropped dead while waiting to be a member of the family. This was the body of Mr. Palmer was on its way to the graveyard, his mother-in-law, who was apparently in perfect health when he died, was lying in a coffin in the house awaiting the same sad rites.

Daniel Geary, an old citizen of Mobile, Ala., fired both barrels of a double-barreled gun at a burglar who got into his room about 2 o'clock Thursday morning. The daylighted corpse of John Jones, a notorious negro, was found in an open lot near Mr. Geary's house. In one of his hands was found $12, which he had stolen from Mr. Geary's house. Although many of the shots struck Jones, a single one only penetrated his heart, and inflicted the fatal wound.

A Bastille for Tilden—A Marvelous Story.

A Mr. John F. Mines, who may be remembered as the reporter to the New York World of a conversation some time ago with Senator Conkling, the most of which was repudiated by that gentleman, has turned up again in the same paper in another startling role. He is a member of the obnoxious reporter will not let him sleep, and so he comes to the front with a prodigious story of how General Stewart L. Woodford planned to nip in the bud but a treasonable conspiracy which never had any existence. Tilden, as the tale runs, was to be inaugurated on March 4, 1877, in spite of the electoral tribunal on the steps of the City Hall in New York. His party was to be upon to seize the custom-house and would be able of course to run the government. This felonious intention was anticipated and frustrated by the appointment of Gen. Woodford as United States attorney for the southern district of New York. That worthy officer says that he thought the danger real and took his precautions accordingly. His orders and his intention were to arrest secretly the President-elect for high treason, convey him privately on board a federal gunboat and ship him to Fort Adams or some other serene point where he would undergo trial. "The first thing anybody knew of it," said Gen. Woodford, "he would have disappeared, and the suddenness of the blow would have either disheartened his followers, or taught them a salutary lesson of respect for the law." The further particulars of this grand plot for New York harbor and marines and regulars in the custom-house and treasury. All this has very much the appearance of a cock-and-bull story, but Mr. Mines is quite capable in intent, but at the same time, it is well known that President Grant would have acted in the way set forth if he had been persuaded such a so-called conspiracy existed.

Killing of the French Prince Imperial.

He did not even die upon the field of battle. He was "speared in the bush" by the alert enemy, while out upon a small reconnoitering expedition, and perished without a chance for glory. This was no occasion for him to join the expedition against the Zulus. He has, if the story be true, perished in consequence of his rash haste to make a figure in the great world which had no place for him, and perished without any of that distinction for which he panted. Napoleon Eugene Louis Jean Joseph ("prince Loooolo," as he was called in the faubourgs of Paris) was born in the purple, at the Tuilleries, March 26, 1856, the only son of the emperor Napoleon III and his wife Eugenie Marie de Montijo. He received a careful education, and grew up an amiable youth, with a rather feeble body and a mind not supposed to be very brilliant. He accompanied his father to Metz on the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, and at Saarbruck, according to the Emperor's lurid dispatch, received his "baptism of fire." After the French defeat he was sent to Belgium, and when his father and mother took up their abode at Chislehurst, was sent to receive instructions at the British military school at Woolwich, where he graduated with credit not long since.

Ill-Treatment of a North Carolinian in the Palmetto State.

The Barnwell (S. C.) Sentinel says that "Tyler Smith, a plain, inoffensive North Carolinian," a tobacco peddler, was in Barnwell last week, and camping near the river, was visited by a number of rangers, with whom he lost his money. The town marshal then arrested Smith, but let the others go. En route to the lock-up, Smith ran and was freed at the marsh and a warren, but after a short stay he was again arrested, and held in the jail for some time. He showed the intendant that the offense charged against him was not within his jurisdiction, and the $25 was thereupon refunded to the prisoner. Upon his release he was immediately re-arrested and carried before a trial justice, who bound him by $100 for his appearance at the next September term of the circuit court. The Sentinel says: "If he desires to push the case he has against the parties who arrested him, and fired at him, there is no telling what the result will be."

The New State Bonds.

Treasurer Worth's pleasant face never loses its placid smile now-days, busy time though it is for him and his department. The old bonds come in steadily for exchange, $12,000 having been received yesterday. The new bonds go out also steadily, and $42,000 were thus issued yesterday. The department yesterday had a letter from a prominent Georgia banker, desiring $50,000 of the new ten per cent, and offering 98 cents for them. This is regarded as a good price, and speaks well for the success of the new plan of exchange. There never was any action which gave such satisfaction as does this grand transaction of the bonds, bonds, bonds.
