THE WESTERN BATEROAD MONEY Without and Within.

I hear him with his brethren swear, As I could do—but only more.

He envies me my brilliant lot,
Breathes on his aching fists in vain.
And dooms me to a place more hot. He sees me into supper go,
A silken wonder by my side,
Bare arms, bare shoulders and a row
Of flounces for the door too wide.

He thinks how happy is my arm,
'Neath its white-gloved and jeweled hand wishes me some dreadful harm, Meanwhile I only curse the bore, Of hunting still the same old coon,

The winter wind is not so cold
As the bright smile he sees me win,
Nor the host's oldest wines so old
As our poor gabble, sour and thin,

I envy him the ungived prance
By which his freezing feet he warms,
And drag my lady's chains and dance
The galley slave of dreary forms. O could he have my share of din, And I his quiet—past a doubt, 'Twould still be one man bored within

The Baltimore Gazette insists that a certain "cock-eyed General" broke up a funeral in Exeter last week in trying to combet the 'officiating clergyman to say that the deceased, if he had lived, would have voted for Butler.

OBSERVATIONS.

Those vulgar New Yorkers! If they knew how it jarred upon the cultured ear of Boston, they would once and forever abstain from that expression. "A bobtail car." Allow us to suggest this formula, which is both terse and elegant, to wit, "A Robert final vehicle."—Bos. Trans.

A small boy whose pants and jacket—one and inseparable—were buttoned up behind, asked his mother, a certain worthy lady of this city, if God punished everybody that fold a lie. "Certainly he does," was the reply. "You had better look out, then, mother, for I haven't had that piece of raspberry ple you promised me two days ago."

Miss Calino goes for the first time to view the sea at Dieppe. At her departure from home her sister recommends her to carry back some sea water in a bottle. She goes down to the shore and fills her vial with water. "Better not fill it up like that, missy," said a sailor, "bekase, it being low water now, when the tide rises it'll burst your bottle." Since our last another Democratic gin, in pur-suit of partisan ends, has enveloped a colored man with the mystery of rough treatment. As usual the gin was Democratic, and the negro a bold and ty officers were to be voted for. It seems to us that this is only an incident in a foul p ot to break up the Republican minority in Georgia. Will the friends and acquaintances of the Rev. Mr. Hayden, of Connecticut, and lhe honorary members of the nation generally, stand by in silence while these outrages go on?—Allanta Constitution.

Among the parishioners of the late Rev. Dr. Storrs, of Braintree, was a well-to-do farmer, Mr. samuel Capen, who, although living a considerable distance from the meeting house, was always sure to attend church on Sundays. It was castomary in old times to have the parish-tax a per cent. on the town assessors' valuation. Mr. Capen's parish-tax was fifty-two dollars per year—just one dollar a week. Mr. Capen, being complimented for his regular attendance at church, replied by saying he should lose a dollar every Sunday he staid away from meeting, and he could not afford
