"ihe Time Is Short." BY AUTHOR OF "STEPS HEAVENWARD," I sometimes feel the thread of life is slender, And soon with me the labor will be wrought; Then grows my heart to other hearts more tender.

A shepherd's tent of reeds and flowers decaying; That night winds soon will crumble into naught; Bo seems my life, for some rude blast decaying. The time is short.

The time is short.

Up. up. my soul, the long-spent time redeeming; Sow thou the seeds of better deed and thought; Light other lamps, while yet thy light is beaming. The time is short. Think of the good thou might'st have done, when

The time is short. Then be thy heart a brother's To every heart that needs thy help in aught; Soon thou may'st need the sympathy of others. The time is short.

The New York Herald says the presence in that city Saturday of a number of Democratic politicians from Albany caused the rumors in regard to a scheme having for its object the unification and harmonizing of the Democratic party throughout that State to assume something like definite shape. The plan proposed is said to be the getting together of the Democratic members of the Legislature, the appointment of a committee, and the sending out of an invitation to the recognized leaders and wise men of the party to meet in Albany at an early day for consultation. It is stated that the plan would have been one of the party to meet in Albany at an early day for consultation. It is stated that the plan would have been developed in detail before now but for the fact that the Kings county between the solubut one, which is recognized now as Democratic Unity. one of the most important factors in State politics, have been backward in and harmony.

A GREAT HISTORIAN'S LOVE.

An Episode in the Life of Gibbon-How He Lost the Too Tender and

Too Frank Heart of Suzanne Cur-The youth of the great English historian presents two very remarkable epi-sodes. In the first, the boy was sent from Oxford to Switzerland to cure him of his professed religious opinions. In the other, the lad was called from Switzerland to England to eliminate a love affair from his heart. In each case i.e was controlled by the stern dictum of his father, who succeeded by uprooting Catholicism from his creed, in driving religion from his belief, and who contrived by eradicating marriage from his thoughts, in exiling love from his soul. So that young Gibbon grew up without piety or passion. The truth, already intimated, is that while among the Alps love came to Gibbon as the bird to the princess in the tower, and upon a fair Swiss maiden, who turned out to be a noble woman, he poured out all the ardor and tenderness of his nature. She became the light of his young life, and around her image as well as under her influence, we cannot doubt that some of the brightest thoughts and purest sentiments of the great writer's life clustered. For who can estimate the influence of such emotion in refining an earnest, impressionable nature, and in directing and intensifying ambition and ability-the world is full of such instances, and one need not recur to the life of Gibbon to mark this bright tracery of love. Opposed in this affair by his father, however, Gibbon was finally recalled to his home, and al-Beecher says when a charch is free of debt it begins to die. If this is true most New York and devoted inamorata that naught though he freely assured his trusting If Mary Walker was to be imprisoned in the Kentucky State prison, where the women are required to wear pantaloons, she'd kick because she couldn't wear dresses. less conduct in renouncing Suzanne Curchod was chargeable largely to his own fickleness and selfishness. True it is, that when his conduct was such In the report of a "swell wedding" it was written, "Her dainty feet were incased in shoes that might have been taken for fairy boots," but the compositor made it read. "Shoes that might have been taken for ferry boats."

as to excite the suspicion of his betrothed as to his sincerity, he warmly defended himself in well rounded phrases and high sounding rhetoric, showing more good composition, how defended himself in well rounded phrases and high sounding rhetoric, showing more good composition, however, than deep feeling. Some time later, Gibbon was moved to break off his engagement, in which letter he depicted himself as broken hearted, and indulged in much exaggerated grief. Still believing that he was making a don't throw out any baits to the public with a mere small article, but fair treatment to all, and polite attention shown to sacrifice for the sake of his father, the every customer. devoted girl cherished him only as a true woman can, and when some years after Gibbon's cold meeting with her smote her very soul, she wrote and entreated him to give a complete avowal of his indifference that she might be

This kind offer Gibbon declined on the ground that it would be dangerous to him, and perhaps to both. Sub-sequent events assisted this neglect in dissipating all illusion, and in her last letter to him she concludes:
> "I no longer menace you with the

Therefore, all over the State, question proved peasant of his father's idea or his own aversion, and the sequel showed that he had thrown "the precious pearl away, richer than all his tribes." upon virtue and rewards patient merit A special from Richmond, Va., says that information has just been received there of the dismissal of 27 students from the Virginia Military Institute, at Lexington, for disobedience of orders and for breaking arrest. The dismissed students had requested Gen. Francis H. Smith, the superintendent, to grant them an additional suspension from duty, to enable them to prepare for examination in descriptive georgraphy, which he refused, as he was on the point of leaving for Staunton on a busicame to Suzanne, when the orphan of the point of leaving for Staunton on a business visit. The students refused to obey the commandant of the Institute to her gentle, humble, decent, modest, a oney the commandant of the Institute in the superintendent's absence, and were dismissed upon his return. A few of the class declined to join the rebellion, and three or four of those who did man was of too high a type and too lion, and three or four of those who did returned to duty. The superintendent had issued an order in the interest of discipline setting forth the facts in the whole affair. The mutiny began on the 24th and the dismissals followed promptly.
