The Dawn Will Come.

The night may be dreary, and sombre and sad,
And swiftly may speed the wild rack in the sky;
The ocean may roar on the wave-beaten shore,
But the dawn of the bright golden morning is nigh!

The tempest may gather, and thunder may roll,
And the frighted birds hide from the lightning's sheen;
But far in the east, from its slumber released,
The dawn of the bright golden morning is seen!

The bitterest sorrow may gather around,
And banish the smile to give place to a tear;
But time will relieve all who tremble and grieve,
For the dawn of the sweet-smiling morning is near!

Then do not despair, O ye weary and sad,
For joy will disperse e'en the shade of a sigh:
Bright days will come back, and the night and the rack
Will flee when the dawn of the morning is nigh!

EDWARD OXENFORD.

OBSERVATIONS.

These who want to see their friends, stay at home. Those who have no friends go to Texas.

He kissed her under the silent stars,
This maiden shy and chary.
"O my!" she cried, "it's awful nice."
Said he: "You're shouting, Mary."

One of the candidates for mayor recently published the following card in a Houston paper: "On account of the mud in our streets and expected arrival of Gen. Grant, I withdraw my name from the canvass."

A New York expert has discovered that "journalists frequently have consciences." The fact that that particular variety of journalists is at work upon Democratic newspapers, he seems to have deemed too notorious to mention.

A young countryman was inquiring the way in a city of the United States, and the first one told him "Four blocks down," the next "Two blocks," and the third "One block." "By hokey," said he, "I believe the whole city's gone crazy over that game Bill showed me."

The next edition of the English dictionary will contain something like this: "Boom—a political movement started in a private caucus, spontaneously announced by widely-distant newspapers, carried through State conventions by machines, and culminating in national conventions."

But few words rhyme with "advertiser."

The advertiser,
He is wiser
Than the Kaiser,

About exhausts the panel.—Free Press. Indeed! Then perhaps you never heard that: There once was a miser, who lived by a geyser on fast-rolling Iser, and married Elizer, and tried to advise her that no early riser would ever despise her, but highly would prize her, if early she hies her to kitchen and fries her old man's appetizer in the shape of a good breakfast before he gets up in the morning. And the panel isn't exhausted yet.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Talmage in Augusta—What He Has to Say of Big Blunders.

Augusta Chronicle.

"I never attempt a profound lecture now," said Dr. Talmage last night. "I once affected such depth in discourse, but I found out that I made two mistakes—the first was that the audience did not know what I was talking about and the second was that I did not myself know."

Accordingly, he essayed to rehearse a series of bright thoughts and pleasing pictures, which proved delightful to his hearers. His grouping of the Big Blunders of life was characteristic and picturesque, and although his entire lecture was colored with the humorous, an occasional touch and extra stroke exposed the artist's pencil and developed the master hand. Dr. Talmage states that his religion is sunshine—certainly a bright code and creed could have been drawn from the lights and shadows of his evening's talk, and if, in abandoning the stilted and supercilious style of oratory, he also omitted the logical and theological grooves of thought, it must not be supposed that the lessons taught were less striking, or the morals contained less pure, on that account. The Big Blunders were briefly these: Multitudinous occupations—surrender to ill temper—submitting to the bad treatment of others—excessive amusements—unhappy domestic relations, and entering life without enthusiasm or enterprise. Twice during his discourse did the distinguished speaker arise to the highest sublimity—in following the English and American wings of civilization and Christianity as they swept the continents, rode dry-shod over the ocean and stopped at the Holy Land; and the other in describing the rising tide of the world's improvements—its ebb and flow, but its full flood of excellence. Twice, too, in his pictures of home and devotion to one's mother, were all the beauties of rhetoric invoked to decorate the most delicate and touching tracery of feeling. Dr. Talmage's lecture gave universal pleasure.

The Relations of Mind and Brain.

New York World.

A curious line of thought is suggested by a review of Dr. Henry Calderwood's work on "The Relations of Mind and Brain" in the London Spectator. There are two sorts of pain—one of the body and one of the mind—the former local, and the latter having no true locality; for it is only by a figure of speech that we speak of "sorrowing hearts." If the mind, as is claimed by pronounced materialists, be a product or function of the body, why should not the emotions of remorse, for instance, appear as a local physical pain in some part of the body connected with a legion of the tissues of that part, or, on the other hand, a twinge of the gout be felt, not in the thumb or the great toe, but in the soul and in the guise of an undying remembrance, a nameless longing, a spasm of envy, revenge, malice, and the like? A murderer who, under the present order of the universe, moral and physical, suffers the pangs of awakened conscience, might, under the supposed order, merely have a severe and persistent pain in his stomach or a stitch in his side. The beneficence as herein shown by nature in not making mental troubles bodily and bodily troubles mental, might almost, one would think, lead Dr. Buchner and Carl Vogt to revise their notions of what matter and mind really are. For had things been differently constituted infidels and anxious inquirers, and old ones, too, for the matter of that, might simply suffer from colds in the head, and instead of studying "Stuff and Kraft," or the latest utterances of a distinguished Western orator, for example, would take to snuff, suderifics, and flannel quilts wound nightly round their heads.

A Puzzled Reb.

While Jackson's corps was cautiously moving to the flank and rear of the Union army at Chancellorsville, the Confederate cavalry in advance became engaged with the enemy. Soon a wounded and bleeding trooper was seen emerging from the woods in front. After looking around, he moyed in the direction from which the infantry were marching, as if seeking the rear, or, as the average gray-jacket would say, the r'ar. Soon afterward rapid firing explained that the blue jackets had closed in behind Jackson, and it was not long before the poor cavalryman was seen coming back again. When opposite the "Stonewall" another cavalryman from the front also arrived. No. 1 at once recognized him and said: "Hallo, Bill—wounded?" "Yes," said No. 2, "but not bad. Let's git to the r'ar." At which No. 1 exclaimed; "This is the darnedest fight I've been in yet. It hain't got no r'ar."

The New York Democracy.

Rival Conventions.

As already announced, both the Tammany and anti-Tammany Democrats of New York will hold conventions at Syracuse on the 20th of April for the purpose of sending delegates to the Democratic national convention at Cincinnati. The peculiar phraseology of the call issued by the Faulkner or anti-Tammany State committee for the State convention precludes the possibility of Mr. John Kelly and his adherents taking part in it, and this the Tammany chief, it is said, has not been slow to discover. The call is addressed to the Democratic electors of the several Assembly districts, and all others, "who intend to support the nominees of the national convention." As Mr. Kelly has repeatedly said of late that he will under no circumstances support Mr. Tilden, it follows that he can have no part or lot in the Faulkner convention.

The call of the Tammany committee is addressed to "all Democrats and others who favor the support of Democratic principles and of representative conventions fairly chosen to express the will of the people in primary bodies assembled, and who are opposed to a pledged delegation to the ensuing national convention for the support of any one man, but in favor of the nomination of an upright, acceptable candidate for President, who can unite the Democratic party of New York and of the nation."

Immediately on the publication of the anti-Tammany call, friends of Mr. Tilden, it is said, secured the exclusive use of the Globe Hotel and the Vanderbilt House during the session of the convention, and also secured the Weiting opera house in which to hold the convention. Nothing daunted, the Tammany leaders went to work and secured the Remington, Temperance, Congress and Empire Hotels for the exclusive use of the Tammany delegates and their friends, and also the Grand opera house in which to hold the Tammany convention.

A dispatch from New York last night says:

The committee appointed by the New York Democratic union to devise a plan to unite the Tammany and anti-Tammany factions have decided to appoint a sub-committee of five to call on those organizations and invite each to appoint committees to confer with them to secure the election of a united representation of the party in New York at the State convention.

A Belle of Former Days.

New York Times.

Mrs. Lydia Dickinson, wife of the late Daniel S. Dickinson, has for weeks past been lying dangerously ill at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Samuel J Courtney, at High Bridge, N. Y. For weeks past the life of the venerable lady has been despaired of. The disease from which she suffers is dropsy, aggravated by other complications incident to old age. In early life Mrs. Dickinson's social and personal accomplishments, added to the high political position and deserved fame of her husband, made her a notable figure in the society of New York and the national capital.

In person Mrs. Dickinson was tall and slender, with dark-blue eyes, dark-brown hair, and gentle manners. Though naturally of a modest and retiring disposition, she possesses great spirit and determination, and which shone forth in times of trial or emergency. Years after Mr. Dickinson had attained his fame he visited the little academy at Oxford where his wife had been educated. To the assembled magnates of the village who came to greet him, he said "that though he had never studied at their institution, he had carried off its greatest prize." Five days before his death, when he was sixty-six years old and his wife sixty-three, he penned a poetical tribute to her, entitled "To Lydia," three verses of which are as follows:

"We started hand in hand to thread
The chequered, changeful path of life,
And with each other, trusting, thread
The battlefields of worldly strife.
* * * * *
"No change of life, no change of scene,
No fevered dreams, no cankering cares,
No hopes which are, or e'er have been,
Nor wrinkled brow, nor silver hairs,
"Have ever changed that vow of youth,
Or blotted it from memory's page,
But warm as love and pure as truth,
It ripens with the frost of age."

A New Industry.

The Legislature of Virginia recently granted a charter for the incorporation of a company to be known as the "Virginia Angora Company." The capital of the association is placed at $2,000,000, of which amount $1,300,000 is said to have already been subscribed. According to its charter the company is permitted to hold in fee 200,000 acres of land, and to issue bonds, but not without the consent of nine-tenths of all the stockholders. A contract has been made with California parties to transfer their stock of thoroughbred Angoras to Virginia, and to furnish also 20,000 ewe goats of original Maltese stock, to be purchased in and brought from Mexico. Although the industry has been successful in California, yet the conditions for success are so far superior in the mountains of Virginia as to warrant the transfer of the herds and an expenditure of about $200,000 in making the transfer and in improvements.

A Down Town Merchant.

Having passed several sleepless nights, disturbed by the agonies and cries of a suffering child, and becoming convinced that Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup was just the article needed, procured a supply for the child. On reaching home and acquainting his wife with what he had done, she refused to have it administered to the child, as she was strongly in favor of Homœopathy. That night the child passed in suffering, and the parents without sleep. Returning home the day following, the father found the baby still worse; and while contemplating another sleepless night, the mother stepped from the room to attend to some domestic duties, and left the father with the child. During her absence he administered a portion of the Soothing Syrup to the baby, and said nothing. That night all hands slept well, and the little fellow awoke in the morning bright and happy. The mother was delighted with the sudden and wonderful change, and although at first offended at the deception practiced upon her, has continued to use the Syrup, and suffering crying babies and restless nights have disappeared. A single trial of the Syrup never yet failed to relieve the baby, and overcome the prejudices of the mother. Sold by all Druggists. 25 cents a bottle.

Will You Believe It?

Woman's Best Friend. To relieve the aching heart of woman, and bring joy where sorrow reigned supreme, is a mission before which the smiles of kings dwindle into utter insignificance. This is the peculiar province of Bradfield's Female Regulator, which, from its unrivalled cures, is appropriately styled 'Woman's best Friend." The distressing complaint known as "Whites," and various irregularities of the womb, to which woman is subject, disappear like magic before a single bottle of this wonderful compound. Physicians prescribe it.

Prepared by Dr. J. Bradfield, Atlanta, Ga., and sold at $1.50 per bottle by T. C. Smith and L. R. Wriston & Co.

NOW IN PERFECT HEALTH.

Near MARIETTA, GA., March 21, 1870.

Some months ago I bought a bottle of Bradfield's Female Regulator, and used it in my family with the utmost satisfaction; have recommended it to three other families, and they have found it just what it is recommended. The females who have used the Regulator are now in perfect health, and able to attend to their household duties. We cordially recommend it to the public.
