STATE NEWS

Cucumbers and snap beans are appearing in the Wilmington market.

Judge Canfield, of Wilmington, will lecture in Lumberton on the 10th of May, says the Reverberator, and also in Fayetteville at an early day.

The Salisbury Democrat says it has heard that Judge Schenk was appointed receiver for the Western Division of the Western North Carolina Railroad.

At a meeting of citizens of Wilmington, Tuesday, to discuss the project of building a railroad to the sound, it was decided to construct a tramway instead. This, it is claimed, will last three years and will bear a rate of speed not exceeding fifteen miles per hour.

The officers of the Third Regiment, North Carolina State Guard, met in Durham last Thursday for the election of field officers. A. B. Gorrel, of Winston, was elected colonel, Major W. T. Blackwell, of Gen. Manly's staff, was elected lieutenant-colonel, and Major L. M. Long, of Weldon, was re-elected.

The Greensboro correspondent of the Raleigh News writes: Col. J. I. Seales leaves in a day to place himself under the order of the physicians of New York. His many friends in the State will regret to hear of the necessity of this step, and will wish that he may find the much needed relief.

Wilmington Review: A Republican in this city who is not an office holder, nor yet a politician, offers us an interesting and valuable article on a Sherman boomer, the sum of $100 that a poll of the town will show that the colored voters of Wilmington is two to one for Grant. He thinks that it will be four or five to one, although the proposition is to be on into to one.

The Wilmington Review, of Tuesday, says: There have been no indications of movement, we regret to say, in Dr. Plummer's condition as yet, the only indications, slight though they were, having been as stated by us yesterday, in a very slight increase of consciousness. This passing train says that he is not enough to justify them in stating that there has been anything like a marked or decided improvement noticeable.

Railroad Inspection.

On Friday last Mr. John S. Barbour, receiver, and other officials of the Virginia Midland Railroad, accompanied by Mr. S. M. Felton, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and Mr. J. M. Bent, superintendent of the same company, made an official tour of inspection of the Franklin and Pittsylvania Narrow Gauge Railroad, preparatory to the reception by the Midland under the contract of lease which has been executed for a year or more. At every station between the Midland Junction and the Rocky Mount, the terminus of the new road, large crowds of people assembled to welcome the distinguished party, and to express their interest in the project. At Rocky Mount the railroad officials and visitors were hospitably entertained by the enthusiastic citizens. At night a conference was held, at which it was agreed that Mr. Barbour will accept the road on the 1st of May, if the contractors and the Narrow Gauge Company can adjust any questions which may arise between them, so that the contractors will deliver up the road, which doubtless will be done. The Pennsylvania express themselves as greatly pleased in regard to the valuable mineral resources of the country opened up by the new road.

The Whitaker Case.

There seems now some probability that the mystery surrounding the Whitaker outrage at the West Point Academy will be dispelled. The fact that United States District Attorney Woodford has caused the arrest of Phil Ryan, the Highland Falls tavern keeper, on a charge of perjury, committed before the Court of Inquiry, shows that his detectives are in possession of evidence not yet made public. When Ryan comes to be tried in a criminal court there will be a searching investigation and a thorough sifting of the facts in the case. It is unfortunate that the investigation by the officers of the Academy should have proved so abortive, for the public expects that they would search to the bottom of the mystery, and bring to light the guilty party. Should Ryan's trial result in the discovery of the perpetrators, the fair fame of the Academy Court of Inquiry may suffer in the estimation of the general public. This will be a source of regret, but the public demands that the mystery be solved, no matter who suffers.

A Contest by Noted Pedestrians.

Daniel O'Leary, the pedestrian, recently placed in the hands of a New Yorker a forfeit of $500 for a race, long-distance walk, with Francis Hart and John Doherty, against two men in England, for any sum from $10,000 to $20,000, the walk to take place in New York city. It is expected that Rowell, Brown and Hazael will accept the challenge. Thomas Davis, lately the backer of Peter J. Fanchot, with two other men in New York city, has decided to accept the challenge. They have communicated with Rowell and Brown, who have authorized them to arrange the race for $10,000 a side, to himself, for one-third of the amount. Rowell and Brown are to draw up articles, which are to be forwarded to O'Leary for his approval.

The Only Present Grant Ever Returned.

From the Hour.

The Mexicans are telling all sorts of stories about the meanness of General Grant. When the party arrived at the charming mountain town of Orizaba, a coladero, or twisting of bulls' tails, was given in honor of the ex-President. Among the performers was a woman, who, mounted upon a fine mustang, performed many surprising feats of horsemanship. General Grant expressed his admiration of her prowess and praised the horse. In the usual Spanish style, the latter was at once offered to the General, who accepted it. It was, however, pointed out to him that he must make some present in return, and rather than do so he sent the horse back.

A Growing Industry.

One of the industries that has grown up within the last few years is the exporting of oysters to Europe. According to figures published in the New York Herald yesterday, for the four years ended in 1879 there were sent to Europe 264,238 barrels of oysters, at a value of $1,321,183. For the six months ended in March, this year, there have been sent 59,642 barrels, at a value of $298,318, and although this is undoubtedly less than last year, yet the figures are large enough to show how important an industry this has become.

How History Repeats the Past.

Some twenty-five years ago the fugitive was captured by the discovery made that James Graham, then Postmaster-General, had taken the train to New York, and was arrested. This resulted in his removal in disgrace. Hon. B. M. Johnson, Postmaster-General, who had ordered that letters to A. M. DePue, New York, be forwarded without interference, being once removed, the history is now conducted.

MYSTERY IN PARIS.

A STARTLING EPISODE IN CRIMINAL LIFE.

TOO! TOO! TOO!

A Story of the Ancient Regime Which is Said to be True, and Which Discovers the Horror of the Imaginations of the Novelists.

The following story of Monsieur Lecco, the Parisian detective, which has been made famous, is vouched for as having really a basis in truth: When M. La Reynie was Lieutenant-General of Police in Paris, produced by a mysterious disappearance of several persons, spread through various districts of Paris. Within four months twenty-six young gentlemen, varying in ages from sixteen to twenty-five years, were missing from their innumerable families. Myriads and contradictory rumors spread in the Faubourg St. Antoine, which had been robbed of five promising tradesmen's sons. The gossips declared that a princess who was suffering from her innumerable families, contended against the malady by taking baths of human blood. Others affirmed that the Jews, at intervals, crucified Christians in hatred of the Saviour, but luckily this rumor was not believed. The subject to the King, and the latter complained to the Lieutenant-General of the Police for allowing such a thing to go on. La Reynie, in despair at the King's dissatisfaction, returned to Paris, on the 15th of February, there he sent for a very smart agent, whom he had previously employed with success in extricating tangled legal skeins. On hearing the report Lecco carried away by his activity, exclaimed: "Well, monseigneur, I see that, in order to relieve you from embarrassment I must renew Abraham's sacrifice." I ask for a week, and at the end of that time, I hope to have good news for you!"

Lecco gave no further explanation, and De la Reynie, who regarded him as one of his most trustworthy agents, dismissed him with a sign that granted him most extensive powers. Lecco had a son to whom he was sincerely attached, and whose education he undertook himself. This lad, called "Wide-awake" by his comrades, owing to his ready wit, really possessed an uncommon insight. He was sixteen years of age, and nature, while developing his mind, had not forgotten his external appearance.

Wide-awake, whose real name was Expere, obtained from Lecco everything that a young man's vanity might desire. His handsome clothes heightened the effect of his personal appearance, but he rarely went out, for Lecco was aware to what young men are exposed in the streets of Paris; he was escorted by spies in whom his father could confide.

ON THE DAY

when Lecco had his conference with De la Reynie, on his return home, he shut himself up with Wide-awake, with whom he had a lengthened conversation; and an hour after the female neighbors noticed the boy go out in the most brilliant toilet, and this time alone. He wore round his neck and hat gold chains and medallions; there were two watches in his fobs, and he frequently clinked the louis with which his pocket was lined. Lecco felt that the young man had necessarily fallen into some galling snare, and that the lure offered them must be a pretty girl. Hence he foresaw that in exposing his son to a meeting with this creature she would not fail to try and ruin Wide-awake also; but the latter, being "wide-awake" would not be caught in the trap by which so many others had perished.

At about 3 p. m. on the fifth day young Lecco, in all his glory, was walking on the river terrace in the garden of the Tuilleries, when

passed close to him. She was alone, but followed at a short distance by a speckled dog, which is becoming a very common sight in Paris. The lady's age might be from twenty-two to twenty-five, and her face and figure were models of beauty. Wide-awake examined her with interest; his glances were not lost, for pleasant ones directly responded to his. He foreboded that he was in for an adventure; could it be the girl he was looking for? In order to make certain he checked his pace and eventually sat down on a bench facing the Champs Elysees.

He had not been there more than ten minutes when the lady, who was now around him, and ended by seating herself on the same bench. They bowed in the usual fashion of the age and entered into conversation. The artful man, who thus found his affair ready made, A. Boy of New York, the reading or preparation of the papers occupied them until 2:30 this morning, when that portion of the necessary copies will be made and the signatures affixed.

Others affirmed that the Jews, at intervals, crucified Christians in hatred of the Saviour, but luckily this rumor was not believed. The subject to the King, and the latter complained to the Lieutenant-General of the Police for allowing such a thing to go on. La Reynie, in despair at the King's dissatisfaction, returned to Paris, on the 15th of February, there he sent for a very smart agent, whom he had previously employed with success in extricating tangled legal skeins. On hearing the report Lecco carried away by his activity, exclaimed: "Well, monseigneur, I see that, in order to relieve you from embarrassment I must renew Abraham's sacrifice." I ask for a week, and at the end of that time, I hope to have good news for you!"

Lecco gave no further explanation, and De la Reynie, who regarded him as one of his most trustworthy agents, dismissed him with a sign that granted him most extensive powers. Lecco had a son to whom he was sincerely attached, and whose education he undertook himself. This lad, called "Wide-awake" by his comrades, owing to his ready wit, really possessed an uncommon insight. He was sixteen years of age, and nature, while developing his mind, had not forgotten his external appearance.

Wide-awake, whose real name was Expere, obtained from Lecco everything that a young man's vanity might desire. His handsome clothes heightened the effect of his personal appearance, but he rarely went out, for Lecco was aware to what young men are exposed in the streets of Paris; he was escorted by spies in whom his father could confide.

ON THE DAY

when Lecco had his conference with De la Reynie, on his return home, he shut himself up with Wide-awake, with whom he had a lengthened conversation; and an hour after the female neighbors noticed the boy go out in the most brilliant toilet, and this time alone. He wore round his neck and hat gold chains and medallions; there were two watches in his fobs, and he frequently clinked the louis with which his pocket was lined. Lecco felt that the young man had necessarily fallen into some galling snare, and that the lure offered them must be a pretty girl. Hence he foresaw that in exposing his son to a meeting with this creature she would not fail to try and ruin Wide-awake also; but the latter, being "wide-awake" would not be caught in the trap by which so many others had perished.

At about 3 p. m. on the fifth day young Lecco, in all his glory, was walking on the river terrace in the garden of the Tuilleries, when

passed close to him. She was alone, but followed at a short distance by a speckled dog, which is becoming a very common sight in Paris. The lady's age might be from twenty-two to twenty-five, and her face and figure were models of beauty. Wide-awake examined her with interest; his glances were not lost, for pleasant ones directly responded to his. He foreboded that he was in for an adventure; could it be the girl he was looking for? In order to make certain he checked his pace and eventually sat down on a bench facing the Champs Elysees.

He had not been there more than ten minutes when the lady, who was now around him, and ended by seating herself on the same bench. They bowed in the usual fashion of the age and entered into conversation. The artful man, who thus found his affair ready made, A. Boy of New York, the reading or preparation of the papers occupied them until 2:30 this morning, when that portion of the necessary copies will be made and the signatures affixed.
