Indeed, it is reported that New York, Philadelphia and Washington bankers and capitalists have already guaranteed a sufficient sum for the preliminary operations, and that the remainder of the necessary funds will be secured in Europe. The promoters of this new enterprise are the intimate and immediate personal friends of General Grant, and it is not improbable that so soon as this enterprise is fairly on its feet, Grant's name will again be associated with an inter-oceanic canal scheme.

The care came up on the motion of Mr. Davenport, counsel for the defendant, for a hearing on the demurrer. Miss Raymond, with little "Tommy Hill," as he is generally called, sat in the witness-room and was able to hear the entire proceedings. Tommy did not seem to be bothered much, and was making himself generally acquainted with those about him. Slowly the thoracic walls expand, the lungs dilate, with long breath drawing in the atmospheric air, then as the electrical current is interrupted the thoracic cavity is diminished and the air is expelled and the act of respiration has been completely performed. Again the battery is applied, and again the air enters and leaves the lungs; the flame of a candle is drawn toward the flame of a candle is drawn toward 'the lips and blown away; the muscles all, save one, obey the mysterious power of electricity, but that one, the noblest of them all, upon whose action the nour-ishment of all so largely depends, rest-ed motionless in the pericardium, like Achilles in his tent, and no Patroclian death or indignity to the other corporate members would arouse it from its stupor. A Feminine Whittaker. The London Telegraph says: "A remarkable story comes from Birkenhead. A certain widow lady living near that markable story comes from Birkenhead. A certain widow lady living near that place gave her servent notice to leave on account of misconduct, but before the notice expired there was an alarm of burglars in the house. The faithful domestic roused up her mistress shortly after midnight with the news that two men had broken in, but that she had driven them off minus the booty they had expected. There was abundant evidence to show that the ruffians had attempted—a broken pane of glass where entrance had been obtained, disturbed plaster and footmarks, an iron bar, masks thrown away and clothing packed up in reddiness for flight. The devoted house maid had been threatened with the iron bar, and had actually received an instalment of burglarious yengeance in the form of a severe blow on the breast. Need it be added that her grateful mistress withdrew the notice to leave, and rewarded the girl with a gratuity of 30 shillings, besides giving her a fortnight's holiday to visit her friends in Ireland? She went on this leave of absence, but while she was away those inquisitive police found out 'something,' and when the heroine returned she was interviewed by the local constabulary, who roundly charged her with having got the 30 shillings on false pretenses. Worse still, the girl after a little fencing, admitted that she had 'got up' the burglar episode herself, and had arranged the implements and other proofs for greater effect, having been prompted partly by a wish to make her mistress smart for the notice to leave and partly by a craving for a holiher mistress smart for the notice to leave and partly by a craving for a holi-

Hanlan on His Defeat.

Hanlan, the carsman, referring to the race on Thursday, on Seekonk, (R. I.) course, said: "I never was better in my life than I was yesterday morning. I weighed one hundred and fifty pounds, which is exactly my proper weight, and I felt just like rowing. I would certainly have won had it not been for this thing. I started off with a lead, rowing well within myself, and I was entirely confident until suddenly ettacked, a short distance from the turning stake. It came like a cramp here, (pointing to his left side,) doubling me over sideways, and causing intense pain for a moment. I was compelled to stop rowing, but it passed off, and I went ahead again. I had partly turned the buoy when it was renewed, and as it kept growing worse and worse, I made up my mind to quit." Hanlan on His Defeat.
