"Good merning, Miss Katle," said roung Mickie "Good-morning, again; it's yourself shure Lees, Lookin' bloomin' as iver." But Kate turned away As she said, "Mister Mickie, I wish you good-day. You're a heartless desaver—now don't spake a Pretty tales about you and that Norsh I've heard.
You know you danced with her the day of the fair,
And praised her gray eyes and her very red hair,
You called her an angel; quite in love with her

And at night, when you parted, you kissed her as Then young Mickle gave a sly wink as he said:
"I desaved her, my darlin this way turn your head...

"Well, I've no time to stay, so good by Mickie Fee, You may desave her, but you don't desave me; I'm not to be blarneyed. Mick, a word in your ear: You had better be off, for my dad's comin' here."
"Oh, your dad's comin' is he? That's not him I Now bobbin' behind that owld blackthorn tree? For it's Paddy Mahon." "Oh," said Kate with

For it's Paddy Manon."

Sneet,

"You've got your eyes open at last, Mickie, dear.

And sure you are right, 'ils my own darlin' Pat;
So take my advice, Mick, and get out of that;
For he's comin' to coort me. Now listen, my lad:
When that boy kisses me, Oh, won't you be giad?
For when his lips meet mine, why, what will I do
But shut both my eyes, Mick, and fancy it's you?

That's what I'll do;

Mickie it's true: Mickie, it's true;

Shut both my eyes
And fancy it's you!"

—Tinsley's Magazine. GEN. HANCOCK. His Personal Appearance and Family-Few Relations. Hancock in personal appearance is tall, well formed and very handsome. His height cannot be less than six feet two inches, and he weighs fully two hundred and forty pounds. He would make the finest-looking President who ever sat in the White House, except, possibly, George Washington. His form towers above other men, and he attracts attention by his mere looks wherever he goes. His eyes are blue and have a benignant and mild expression when in repose, but inspiring when in danger. His manner is dignified and knightly and he is courtesy itself. He is always magnetic and draws men to him by his kindliness and gentle interest in their affairs. His sympathies are easily aroused and he becomes intensely concerned for the sorrows and misa man a good opinion of himself, and made each one feel he was of more im-portance than he ever before suspected. It was this which caused him to have such power over his officers and men in battle, and made them prefer rather to die than forfeit the good opinion of their commander. Gen. Hancock had two children, Russell Hancock and Ann Elizabeth Han-cock. The latter died in New York of typhoid fever when eighteen years of troubles were his own. Hancock's kindness to his subordinats always won not only their love, but also their confidence, and caused them to rely on him as a friend as well as commander. He gave

Ludicrous Scene in the British House of Commons. Parliamentary etiquette forbids any one to pass between a Commoner on his legs and the Speaker whom he is addressing. New members are naturally apt to forget the theory that when a man is making a speech in the House of Commons he is addressing, not the assembly of 400 or 500 gentlemen who surround him, but the wig and gown in the canopied chair. The consequence is that new members when they want to move about the House have no scruple in passing between the chair and the member addressing it. Thereupon the House is filled with howls of execration, which are not lessened, since it often happens that the object of rebuke, delightfully unconscious of offense, placidly continues his journey, wondering what the unfortunate member on his legs could have said to excite this outburst of anger. Recently an outrage unparalleled in Parliamentary history sent a thrill through the House. Mr. Leahy, a member from Ireland, was speaking, and feeling the necessity of refresh-ment, asked a gentleman sitting above him, nearer the chair, to fetch him a glass of water. The new member, in his good-natured haste to make himself useful, not only crossed between Mr. Leahy and the Speaker, but attempted to push between the member and the back of the bench before him. Now Mr. Leahy is a man of great frontal development. The result of the new member's endeavor to be useful was that he got wedged in between the back of the bench and Mr. Leahy's stomach, where he literally stuck, while the House howled at him as if it had discovered him attempting to pick a pocket.

Prevalence of Spicide. A writer in Blackwood's Magazine, who has made an intelligent study of the statistics and authorities on the subject, says that suicide has been rapidly increasing all over Europe during the last hundred years, and that it is still on the increase. Not fewer than sixty thousand Europeans, or about one in every five thousand of the population, are reported to kill themselves every year. The writer cited, asserts that the average rate of self-destruc-tion is five times greater now than it was a century ago. It is not improba-ble that the percentage is much higher now than formerly, but it may be questioned whether the increase comes any-where near the above estimate. No doubt suicides have largely increased in numbers in the United States also, but in no such proportion as the above would indicate for European countries. Suicides, indeed, appear to be a feature of our modern civilization.

A Cotton Mill in a Cotton Field. The Augusta—(Ga.) Chronicle states that work on the new Sibley mills is now going vigorously on, with 333 hands, a large force working day and night. The labor at the rock quarry near the mills continues all the time, and three locomotive headlights illuminate the work.

The mills have at a seistance in making near by, of great assistance in making mortar, and the massive structure stands in the centre of a large cotton field, with the growing plant at its very doors. Hundreds of citizens visit the busy spot every day, and the railroad will soon be finished to that point. The new mill is to cost nearly $1,000,000, and a large portion of the stock was taken by Northern capitalist.

GREAT CONFUSION IN THE COM-

Thrust Into the Tower After Hefus ing to Retire from the House-Bradlaugh's Claims to Membership -Unprecedented to Condemn Any one Without a Hearing-A Spicy Debate.

London, June 23.—The House of Commons to-day is crowded. Mr. Bradlaugh presented himself at the table. The Speaker informed him that. in consequence of the resolution of the House yesterday, he must retire. Mr. Bradlaugh wished to address the Speaker. The opposition cried, "Withdraw."
The Speaker informed Mr. Bradlaugh that he must withdraw. Mr. Labouchere moved that Mr. Bradlaugh be $18.00 neard at the bar. This motion was

Mr. Bradlaugh eloquently combated the resolution arrived at against him. He said it was unprecedented to condemn anyone until heard. He argued against being accused of atheism. He said he would not forego either his pinions or his claims to his seat. The House might afterwards expel him, but until he had taken his seat it has no jurisdiction over him. The House can't override the law which permits him to take the oath. If an appeal should be necessary, as he hopes it will not be, it must be made. He asked the House to give him the justice which the judges would give him if applied to. He was loudly cheered.

The Speaker asked whether Mr. Bradlaugh should be called in to hear the pleasure of the House. Sir Stafford Northcote and Premier Gladstone both thought that no new case had arisen. The latter thought that last night's resolution was illegal, but submitted to it as the decision of the House. Mr. Labouchere asked leave to move that Mr. Bradlaugh be allowed to take the oath. This was ruled out of order. Mr. Labouchere then moved to rescind last night's resolution, but, after discussion, at the request of Mr. Gladstone, withdrew his motion. Mr. Bradlaugh having been called in, advanced to the table and was informed by the Speaker of the decision of the House and was requested to withdraw. Mr. Bradlaugh twice respectfully refused to with-draw. Sir Stafford Northcote moved that the Speaker be authorized to enfortunes of others, striving in every force his withdrawal. The House diway to relieve them, as though their | vided on this motion whilst Mr. Brad laugh was standing at the table. Sir Stafford Northcote's motion was adopted by a vote of 326 to 38.

Mr. Bradlaugh refused positively to obey. He was thereupon removed be-yond the bar. He returned twice, declaring that the House had no right to exclude him, that it could only imprison him. Sir Stafford Northcote moved that Mr. Bradlaugh, having refused to obey the order of the House, he be given into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Mr. Gladstone seeing no other means for giving effect to last night's resolution, seconded the motion. Sir Stafford Northcote's motion that Mr. Bradlaugh be given into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms was adopted by a vote of 274 to 7. Mr. Bradlaugh was finally removed by force and confined in the Tower. The scene in the House was one of great excitement and confusion.

DOUGHERTY'S SPEECH

Nominating Hancock in the Cincinnati Convention.

N. Y. Herald Report. The call of Pennsylvania was responded to by Dan Dougherty, a well known lawyer of Philadelphia, on his own account. He is of medium height, with a pronounced forehead, curly hair, lawdy-dawdy whiskers and a delicately chased profile. He is a born orator and a finished rhetorician, and werked up to the name of Winfield Scott Hancock with consummate skill, making the first genuine sensation of the session. Mr. Dougherty said: I rise to nominate one whose name would reconcile all factions, whose election would crush the last embers of sectional strife and be hailed as the dawning of the day of perpetual broth-erhood. With him we can fling away erhood. With him we can fling away our shields and wage an aggressive war. We can appeal to the supreme tribunal of the American people against the corruption of the Republican party and their untold violations of constitutional liberty. With him as our chieftain the bloody banner of the Republicans will fall from their palsied grasp. Oh, my countrymen, in this supreme moment, when the destinies of the republic are at stake: when the liberties public are at stake; when the liberties of the people are imperilled, I rise to present to the thoughtful consideration of this convention the name of one who, on the field of battle, was styled "the superb," yet who has won a nobler renown as the military Governor, whose first act on assuming command of Louisiana and Texas was to salute the con-stitution by proclaiming, amid the joy-ous greetings of an oppressed people, that the military, save in actual war, shall be subservient to the civil power. The plighted word of the soldier was proved in the statesman's acts. I name him whose name will suppress every faction, is alike acceptable to the North and South, and will thrill the land from end to end. The people hang breath-less on your deliberation. Take heed! Make no misstep! I nominate one who make no misstep! I nominate one who can carry every Southern State, and who can carry Pennsylvania, Indiana, Connecticut, New Jersey and New York—the soldier-statesman with a record as stainless as his sword—Winfield Scott Hancock, of Pennsylvania. If elected he will take his seat, "As Drunk as Blaizers." Life of Richard Waldo Sibthora.

We may live and learn. I remember 50 years since, or more, at one of the Lincoln elections, hearing a man in the crowd say to another, speaking of the preceding night, "We got drunk as Blaigers." I never gould make out what he meant. Yesterday I was reading Sir Thomas Wyse's "Impressions of Greece," and, speaking of the reverence for St. Balize in Greece (who is also, as you Balize in Greece, (who is also, as you know, the patron saint of the English woolcombers,) and how his feast was observed in the woolen manufactories of served in the woolen manufactories of the Midland Counties, he says, "Those who took part in the procession were call ed 'Blaisers,' and the phrase as drunk as Blaizers,' originated in the conviviali-ties common on those occasions." So good "Bishop and Martyr" Blaise is dis-honored as well as honored in Eng-land, and very probably in Greece.
