The Workman to His Wife.

Come, Mary, throw your work aside,
And let your trouble be:
Leave care and toil and smoke awhile,
And spend an hour with me.
We'll seek the cowslip on the bank.
The primrose in the lane,
And happy sights and sounds afar
Shall make us young again.

It's long, my love, since you and I
Have heard the blackbird sing,
Or caught by running brooks and woods,
The glory of the Spring.
It's long since you and I have trod
The paths where hawthorns blow,
Then Mary, fling your work aside,
And let your troubles go.

The trees shall bend to welcome us; The flowers shall clasp our feet; The very bees shall hymn our praise,

In murmurs soft and sweet.
The winds shall swell, with ready voice,
The chorus high and loud,
And we'll forget the world, my wife,
And all its busy crowd. A thousand things await us love—
Blue skies and balmy air,
Green fields, whose very sight shall make
The heart forget its care.
Then never sigh, be glad to-day,
Throw sorrow to the wind,
Nor pause till we have left our ills
A Summer's hour behind.

OBSERVATIONS.

TROTTED IN 2.11 1-2.

Maud S. Lacks Only a Quarter of a Second of St. Julien's Best Record.

CHICAGO, Sept. 16.—There was a large attendance this afternoon to witness the attempt of Maud S to beat the re-cord of 2.1114. The weather was pleasant, but there was a strong east wind. The first event was the 2.30 race. Calamus was a strong favorite and took the three heats easily, Mary Miller second and J. W. Thomas third. Time, 2.27%, 2.27%, 2.29%. The second race, his well-known talent to the working for 2.50 class, was won by Kate Sprague, up of the scheme.

tanced. Time, 2.23%, 2.28%, 2.26%, 2.24.
The appearance of Maud S. on the track to trot against time for $2,500 was a signal for hearty applause. Her first heat was merely made to warm her up, and as she left her feet several times it was made in 2.261/2. The first quarter of her second heat was made steady in 33½ seconds and then she was cut loose for her best speed, making the half mile in 1.04½. Her driver sped her at an undiminished gait to the three-quarter and which was reached in 1.26%. ter pole, which was reached in 1.36%. Coming home there was scarcely less excitement than when the record was lowered in the summer meeting, for it seemed certain that she would make the mile in 2.11 at least, but she left her feet when but a few yards from the wire and the heat was spoiled. The watches did not seem to agree, those outside of the stand making her time 2.10½ to 2.11 while the time announced by the judges was 2.11½.

St. Julien had a narrow escape at Kalamazoo last night. The car on which he was traveling with two attendants was ditched at that point by a misplaced switch. Luckily he landed on his feet and was not hurt.

Where Does the Day Begin As a matter of fact, the day begins all around the world-not at the same instant of time, but just as the sun visits successive portions of the earth in his journey from East to West. But the traveler who crosses the pacific ocean can give another answer to the ocean can give another answer to the above question; that on the 18th degree of longitude—one-half of the circumference of the globe, starting from Green wich East or West—there is an arbitrary change or dropping of a day, and that at this point, if anywhere, the day may be said to begin. It was with strange feelings that the writer, crossing the Pacific, having gone to bed on Saturday night, leaving everything pertaining to the almanac in a satisfactory taining to the almanac in a satisfactory condition, awoke on Monday morning!
Sunday had completely dropped from our calendar, for that week at least.
Everyone knows that in traveling round the world from East to West a day is lost, and in order to adjust his reckoning to that of the place he has left, one must drop a day as if he had not lived it, when in reality the time has passed by lengthening every day during the journey. For a long time it was the custom for sailors to effect this was the custom for sailors to effect this change pretty much where they pleased; but it has now become a settled rule among American and English navigators that at the 18th degree a day must be passed over if going West, and one added if going East, in which latter case the traveler enjoys two Sundays or two Thursdays, as the case may be. It is most likely that this particular degree was decided on from the fact that, except a few scattered islands of Polynesis, there are no large communities, with their vast commercial and social with their vast commercial and social transactions, to be affected by the Texas Cattle Fever. The department of agriculture has prepared an interesting paper upon the Texas cattle fever. According to the investigations of the department this disease was first brought to public attention as far back as 1814, when South Carolina cattle affected with the disease had been prohibited from entering ease had been prohibited from entering Virginia. When first introduced in a new district most of the animals die after being exposed to it for three or four days. After a few years its course is milder, and the native cattle are not affected so seriously. The area of the district affected by the fever is said to cover 550,000 square miles, including parts of Virginia, North and South Carolina and Georgia, extending west to the Rocky Mountains and to the Atlantic and the Gulf. The disease is favored by hot, dry weather, and disappears with frost in districts where it is not native. Texas cattle, while apparently not seriously affected by it themently not seriously affected by it them-selves, will communicate it to the cattle of any district through which they pass, The fever is held primarially to be due to a parasitic organism of a vegetable nature.

POLITICAL INKLINGS In and About Washington.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—Whether justly founded or not, suspicions are freely expressed that there is dectoring of the returns in the interest of the Republican candidates going on in some of the back townships of Maine. But the prestige and the moral effect have already been gathered in, and the Republicans could not now be benefited by any such doubtful proceedings. About the most quiet official in town About the most quiet official in town just now is Mr. Raum) the commissioner of internal revenue. He went up to Maine to make campaign speeches, and was constantly telegraphing back to Washington accounts of the enthusiastic meetings he was addressing and predicting an immense Republican majority

Secretary Sherman says he will not at any rate make any more stump speeches before the October elections. He says that his speeches are mainly of a statistical character, and he does not think that kind, under the circumstances, will be of particular advantage in Ohio or Indiana. In fact, he has already gotten them off in those states.

Mr. Wm. E. Chandler a week ago, when it was thought that ex-Represenwhen it was thought that ex-Represen-tative Jones would not be nominated for Governor of New Hampshire, said the contest in that State would be very close, and the Republicans could only carry the State by hard work. Now that Mr. Jones, who is immensely popu-c politicians have added New Hampshire to the certain Democratic States in November. It is understood that since the Maine election a second assessment has been levied upon the departments clerks and government employes, and in addition a confidential circular addressed to business men has been prepared and sent out. It asks for contributions on the ground that stability and business prosperity can only be maintained by the election of Garfield. New York Republican politicians are whispering that there is a big scheme on foot for the capture of that State. They intimate that Johnny Davenport has resigned his position as clerk of the United States Circuit Court in order that he may devote his whole time and Concerning Suicide.

The condemnation of suicide among

Saturday Review.

the ancients was halting and intermittent at best. Pythagoras expressly forbids it, on the ground recognized by christian and theistic moralists generally in later times, that no one has a right to depart from the position where God has placed him; and Plato indorses his prohibition, though in a less abso-lute form. Aristotle's condemnation is based on the duty of citizens to the State. Plutarch considered it cowardly and unworthy of the dignity of man; the Neoplatonists condemned it as involving a perturbation and therefore pollution of the soul; Cicero condemns, but stultifies his censures by his exceptions; Marcus Aurelius wavers in his judgment; Seneca openly applauds, and the whole stoic school followed him; Pliny more than approves. And popular opinion under the Roman empire was, to say the last, entirely tolerant of suicide, which was freely practiced, and not only by Stoics who had Cato for their great exemplar. Lucretius, Cassius, Atticus and Petronius Arbiter may be named as conspicuous instances.
To Seneca the option of suicide appeared the one grand consolation under the tyranny of Nere; to Pliny it even constituted a superiority in the lot of man over that of the Deity, that he could at any moment bring his existence to an end; Epictettus thought it cowardly to live on when life had become irksome from weariness or disease, and on this from weariness or disease, and on this principle the poet Silius Italicus starved himself to death. In Stoical teaching suicide was not merely permissible, but a virtue, and was deliberately practiced as such. It has been justly observed that "the doctrine of suicide was the culminating point of Roman Stoicism," as illustrating the proud, self-reliant, unbending character of the true philosopher, whose boast it was to hope little and fear nothing. Life and death in the Stoical system were attuned to the same key. The deification of human same key. The deification of human virtue, the total absence of all sense of sin, the proud, stubborn will that deem-ed humiliation the worst of stains, appeared alike in each. Killed Himself Because He Couldn't Decide which Sweetheart He Leved

WITTKOWSKY

A Cincinnati Commercial special from Muncie, Ind., Sept. 7, says: Yesterday evening in Liberty township, near Windsor, in the southeastern part of this county, was enacted another of those horrible "love tragedies" of which this county has been given three within this county has been given three within the past two months. The victim was Lynn Brooks, aged about 22 years. He loved, and loved to desperation, two fair maidens of the neighborhood. His love was not unreciprocated either, for he had been assured that his affections young men of ambition naturally do. kissed her on the way. It chanced that his other girl saw his manœuvre, and when he returned at eventide to pay when he returned at eventide to pay his respects to No. 2, he was informed in a repremanding way that his walk, his kiss, and the other sweet demonstra-tions made with his other girl, had been duly noted. Brooks walked from the house of that girl to the barn yard, where there were some young men amusing themselves at play. On his way he remarked to his girl, or some other party, that he didn't care to live: way he remarked to his girl, or some other party, that he didn't care to live; that he loved both the girls and did not know which he loved most—that he could not make up his mind. He saked the young men at the barn for a pistol, saying he wanted to shoot some rats. A pistol was loaned him and he returned to the house and went up-stairs to a room. Shortly a pistol shet was heard. The people about the premises rushed up-stairs to the room and there found Brooks dead, a pistol ball having penetrated his brain. It was plain that he had held the weapon to his temple and the circuitous route of the ball had completely riddled his cranium.
