The Independent Farmer.

Let soldiers praise their arms;

But in my heart this I'll keep,

The Independent Farmer.

When the role in robe of green,

Uniforms his crimson being.

And round his homely form is seen

The homestead's plow.

When banks of bloom their sweetness yield

To best of garden herbs.

The home he loves so dearly:

The gray old barn whose doors enfold

His team and store measures.

More rich than hoards of hoarded gold,

A precious, bloodless treasure.

But yonder in the porch stands

His wife, the lovely charmer.

The sweetest rose on all his lands—

The Independent Farmer.

To him the spring comes dawning day,

To him the summer blushes.

The autumn smiles with mellow ray,

His sleep the winter hushes.

He cares not how the world may move,

No doubts or fears surround him;

He smiles in calm content and love.

On children gathered round him

He smiles in God, and loves his wife.

No grief, nor ill may harm her,

His nature's nobility in life—

The Independent Farmer.

It is not whiskey that makes a man drunk, it is his inability to care.

If you know a tree by its fruits, how are you going to recognize an axle tree.

A good question to ask a policeman—Does your mother know your route?

It has leaked out that a girl who eats onions voluntarily breathes the fact to her admirer.

"Come and see me, I needle little of your aid," remarked a piece of cloth to the maiden fair.

As a street-car conductor took a rural passenger's money the other day, he called it an agricultural fare.

Says George Eliot—who ought to know if anybody does: "Marriage is a state of higher duties."

Yes, George, and the laborer is worthy of his higher.

Rev. Dr. Hall said every blade of grass was a sermon. The next day he was amusing himself by clipping his lawn, when a particular blade said: "That's right, doctor. Cut your sermons short."

Hancock in New York and Pennsylvania.

Forney's Progress, October 25.

I have spoken seven times in the great State of New York for General

Hancock, the favorite son of Pennsylvania, and in a long life of experience in politics, State and national, with considerable knowledge in foreign lands, I have never witnessed such enthusiasm for a public man as that which thrilled

the great masses of the people of all parties in the Empire State. I remember the rapture with which General

Jackson was welcomed whenever he personally appeared in the North, the restless force of his character when became a candidate for re-election in 1832, his merciless abuse by the same party who are now trying to defeat

General Hancock for the Presidency, and his overwhelming vindication at the ballot box. I remember the inspicable gratitude of the people for Abraham Lincoln whenever he showed himself to the masses. Everybody recollects how General Grant was received as he passed through Philadelphia before he left for Europe; and I was present at one of the indescribable receptions of Garibaldi in Rome. I was a spectator of the wonderful scene before the opening of the last International Fair at Paris, when, for the first time in many years, the Marseilles

Hyann was permitted to be sung in the streets, but never have I seen such a manifestation of public sentiment and public gratitude as the slightest reference to the hero of Gettysburg excites among the people of New York.

Policeman No. 329.

Officer Michael McDermott of the Church-street police, charged the Tombs, yesterday, a woman whom he said had been drunk in the street and had called him "old 329," that being the number of his shield.

"Are you a Republican?" a World

reporter asked McDermott.

"Yes I am," he responded. "I intend to vote for Garfield because he took the $320 and wouldn't give it back. I admire such a man."

"Do they bother you much on your beat?"

"Yes, they begun it about three weeks ago. I was standing on the corner of Vesey and Greenwich streets, when a well-dressed man approached and whispered mysteriously that I was wanted a block up. I went up first feeling sure if my revolver and billy were all right

I got up to the next street but things were as quiet as Sunday. There is a man down there who has been stabbed

329 times," the fellow said. "What?"

says I; "where's the man as done it?" By Justice—329 times?"

"Yes, and that's not all," says he.
