An Evening Picture

They settled in a darker room till night followed upon the mountains, from whose peaks a faint light of moonlight gleamed down upon the valley. The sun dropped beneath the ground; then followed the moon, and the stars appeared in the sky. The clouds were hanging the thin moon, and all around the valley above, swarming desolately, dark mountains of the horizontal sea.

Three Deaths from Violent Causes.
Killed by a Boiler Explosion.
Wilmington Review.
We regret to learn of a fatal accident which occurred at Mr. John Watkins' steam saw mill, on Peggy's Island, in the Bannerman's Bridge section of Pender county, on Thursday last. Though somewhat, but what of it? We have not learned the boiler of the mill exploded, killing instantly Mr. Levi Bartlett, and injuring very seriously Mr. Clinton Bond, the engineer of the mill, whose injuries, it is thought, will not be fatal. Mr. Bond was also burned and bruised considerably, but not to a serious extent. Mr. Bartlett was a gentleman of character. He was a fine musician and a useful man. He was at the mill for the purpose of having some logs sawed up, and it is thought he had just begun to work in a few minutes when the terrible disaster occurred. One of his legs was blown off by the explosion, and it is thought his death must have been almost instantaneous. Mr. Bond, the engineer of the mill, was burned very badly by being scalded with steam, and it is said he has peeled off his entire body.

ARISTOCRATIC IDEALS

New York's Fifth Avenue. Live by the sword, die by the sword. The man who does no work and yet lives on the fat of the land are constantly increasing in New York. I do not refer to the clever fellows who pick up all sorts of odds and ends by their wits, but to the high-toned idlers along Fifth Avenue and elsewhere, who roll in neither do they spin, and yet dress in the best and fare sumptuously every day, chiefly at the clubs. Most of them are the sons of men who laid up fortunes by just and hard work, as many of our busy merchants are doing now. The fortunes were put into their hands or some other form of permanent investment, and now yield handsome annual returns. We have landlords in New York whose rent rolls run from $80,000 to $500,000 a year, and in some cases to $1,000,000. These, I need hardly say, are excluded from the category of millionaires, though their names are not often seen in the papers. As a rule, the sons of these millionaires are first-class, and the second have no inclination to work. It was enough for their fathers and grandfathers to do that. What they live for is to have a good time—dress at the top of the fashion, drive fast horses, and be half-fledged in all the pleasures of the clubs, and give invitations to stylish dinners and receptions, and in a general way copy the manners and dress of the English aristocracy as closely as possible. A good deal has been said from time to time about the growth of a privileged class in New York, and it is not surprising that it should be called the community of aristocratic idlers. As families acquire wealth, and get up in the fashionable world, this class steadily increases, and it is not long before it dilutes greatly and would like to be called. It keeps on growing and will continue to do so. Its existence is no doubt one of the inevitable consequences of the accumulation of money in individual hands.

JACK THE GIANT KILLER

A good little boy named Jack, who had a very good mother, and a very good father, one day went out to look for a Giant named Blunderbore, who lived in the castle of Tynanby. Jack had a magic bag, and he was very clever. He had a magic bag, and he was very clever. He had a magic bag, and he was very clever.

JACK THE MOD SLINGER

But there was another boy named Jack, a nasty, bad-minded little fellow, who had a magic bag, and he was very clever. He had a magic bag, and he was very clever. He had a magic bag, and he was very clever.

Drowned in a Creek

Mr. J. E. Plett, of Lower Fork township, spent Friday night of last week with Mr. Henderson and his brother, whose house is in the above township, and on Saturday morning following, before breakfast, he went out to the creek near by to wash, and did not return. His brother Henderson went in to look for him, and found his body floating in the creek, face downward, with the water pond up around him and life extinct. Mr. Plett was subject to fits, and it is supposed that he was attacked in this way and fell into the creek, which was only a few inches deep, and was drowned.

The Republicans and the Electoral Count

Wash. Cor. Richmond State.
In joint caucus last night Republican senators and members of the House, and a number of resolutions which is pending in the House. Judge Latham, of New York, spoke at length in support of his resolution pledging the Republicans to resist the passage of the Morgan resolution to the effect and effect, and to resist the passage of the Morgan resolution to the effect and effect, and to resist the passage of the Morgan resolution to the effect and effect.

A GREAT DECLINE IN WOOLEN GOODS!

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE PUBLIC!

Having received intelligence from our house in Baltimore, which is one of the largest purchasers of Woolens, that the same have declined from 15 to 20 per cent, which naturally makes a decline in Clothing, we consequently sell accordingly, and we now offer our stock at reduced prices, in the city and for large quantities. We are assured that we purchase at very "close figures" and give every patron the benefit. We have more styles than any other house can show, and better made Clothing than any other sold in this market, for the simple fact that most of them are made in our own house, and in the same as a garment made to order. The most complete line of Overcoat Ulsters and Ulsters that has ever been exhibited, made to order, in this market. We invite the public to come and see facts.
