$415U-1110 THE MIDIAND EXTENSION.

The Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Baltimore, embracing a days, or it will go by the board. membership of 204 business men of that city, has taken under consideration project will observe this with interest." And yet it is not so satisfactory as would at first appear; for the general impression in this part of the State has been that as soon as the affairs of the Virginia Midland company were gotten company relieved of its embarrassment courts, the Baltimore and Ohio company would at once come, to its assistance, and, with the aid which has been promised from residents along the proposed line, build the extension at once. This meeting seems to indicate that the business men of Baltimore have recoived no such satisfactory assurances, but that, on the contrary, they feel the necessity of taking some action at once to secure the business which such a line would bring them. Business communities do not move quickly in such matters, and it will require a deal of agitation to induce Baltimore's business people to subscribe the requisite fund. Altogether we are disposed to regard the movement of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association as an evidence that the road is not to be speedily built, though it may be a beginning which shall utimately result in the carrying out of this grand scheme of a rival through line from North to South. Certain it is that Baltimore would receive the chief benefits of such a line.

The speech of Mr. Bland, given in the report, shows very clearly the necessity of forming the connection at Charlotte, instead of making a junction at some point on the Air Line below this city, and it is safe to say that if the to say as to how the line shall run, they will not consent to its passing around Charlotte in the manner proposed. Possibly the movement of the Mer-may have been originated by the Baltimore and Ohio company in the hope of securing as much aid in that city as possible. In this view of the case, the apprehension above referred to would be groundless. But the report of the proceedings does not seem to warrant such an opinion, for one of the speakers admits that the plans of the Baltimore and Ohio company are not known. In short, nothing more appears to be known at the headquarters of the company than along the proposed line.

The Republican minority in Congress by their filibustering and obstruction measures succeeded in defeating the three leading measures urged by the majority of that body, the failure of which has rendered it more notorious for what didn't do than for what it actually accomplished. The attempt to pass an electoral bill had to be abandoned altogether for this reason, and before the new Senate had gotten organized out comes Mr. Blaine with a proposition looking to the very thing his party has been engaged in defeating. They are responsible to the country for the failure of the apportionment bill, on account of which thirty Legislatures will have to meet in extra session this winter at a cost to the people of nearly a million dollars. The funding scheme was delayed so long that there was not time to prepare a new bill after the President's veto, and consequently the question of funding is as far from being settled to-day as it was too months ago, and hence business suffers to a more or less extent on account of the uncertainty which surrounds the measure. These are some of the things the Republican minority is responsible for, and which an intelligent public will not allow to be charged to the Democratic majority.

Texas denies the right of a white man to marry a colored woman. One Emile Francois asserted his right to marry despite the Texas code. He was indicted, convicted and sentenced to prison for five years. The case was carried before the United States circuit court, and Justice Woods decides that the fourteenth amendment abrogates that article of the Texas criminal code under which Francois was convicted. The right of white and colored people to intermarry is, therefore, established. Taste is the only barrier remaining.

It da naw pretty well settled that two citizens of this country did actually decline seats in Garfield's cabinet. Senator Allison refused the treasury portfelie, and Congressman Morton that of the navy. The former declined on account of the ill health of his wife, which forbade her undertaking the social obligations incident to the station. Mr./ Morton, it is understood, acted upon the advice of friends who insisted that New York ought to require a department with more patronage than that of the navy.

Hayes exercised the right of vetoing measures adopted by Congress ten times-more than any of his predecessors. Six of these vetoes were in the direction of keeping troops at the polls despite the most persistent efforts of the Democrats for a free, unintimidat- and Western Union Companies stock. ed ballot. THE SENATE

Helping Garfield Along with His Appointments

WASHINGTON, March 9.- The President sent the following nominations to the Senate to-day: L. P. Merton, of New York, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to France: Wm. M. Evarts, of New York, Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, and Timothy O. Howe, of Wisconsin, to the International Monetary Conference at Paris; Robert J. Taylor, of Indiana, a member of the Mississippi River Improvement Commission.

The Senate in executive session today confirmed the nominations of Evarts, Thurman and Howe, commissioners of the International Monetary Conference at Paris.

The Question of Organization. WASHINGTON, March 9.- The Democratic Senate went into caucus at 1 o'clock this afternoon to receive a report from the committee of nine on the revision of the Senate committees. It is said that the caucus committee finally agreed to recommend the selection of Senator Davis, of Illinois, as chairman of the judiciary committee, and that they have placed Senators Pendleton and McPherson on the list of members of the anance committee to succeed Kernan and Wallace.

The Republican Senators also held a caucus this afternoon and decided to adhere to their former action and oppose a reorganization until the existing vacancies are filled.

J. C. ALLES (20) S. John M. Key York, 1

The Kind of Men Who Have Climbed it-All Ronds frond to Bome. Philadelphia Times.

George Washington belonged to the highest classes and was known as a "Virginia gentleman." His family belonged to the aristocracy and was connected with the English gentry. He began life as a serveyor, but his social position was increased and he obtained wealth by marrying the Widow Custis. A story is told of his later years that a poor Virginian of quality, whom he had reproved, retorted sharply, "I should like to know, George Washington, what you would have been if you hadn't married the Widow Custis." Washington smiled, because the man was poor and unfortunate, but he rarely allowed such liberties.

John Adams was a son of a farmer and shoemaker, although his family had been settled in Massachusetts for seven generations. The Adamses are one of a few American families that can be called historical. They are known in politics, law, literature and statesmanship. They are also known for their wealth. No family can compare with them in the number of offices they have filled and the respect in which they are entertained. In ancient Rome they would have been called a consular family. They are the Adamses of Quincy, and in France Charles Francis Adams would be called M. de Quincy. Quincy is an old French, or rather a Norman name, and appears in the roll of Battle Abby. It has only a territorial relation to the Adamses. The name belongs properly to another great American family, descended from an ancestor who was in the battle of Hasttings, A. D. 1066. John Adams was a lawyer by profession.

Thomas Jefferson was also a lawyer His family held a good, but not a high, social rank in Virginia. He made for himself a great name for all times as a legislator, an author, a diplomatist and a political leader, but his greatest achievement was the writing of the Declaration of Independence. He came into public life through the struggle between the Colonies and England. James Madison came from a wealthy lawyer, but never practiced much at the bar, having entered public life very early. He was a great student, James Monroe was also the son of a Virginia planter and lawyer, but like Madison he went early into public life. He served honorably in the army and in many civil offices. He had a wide experience in public affairs and a thorough training in statesmanship. John Quincy Adams was the oldest son of John Adams and a lawyer: but his life was divoted to public service, with a few interludes given to literary pursuits. He was educated for statesmanship by his parents and had a larger and more varied experience in pub-life than any other President. Andrew Jackson was a poor boy, whose early life was full of hardships. merchant, a judge, a planter and a sold-

Martin Van Buren's father was too poor to give him an education, and whatever he was he owed to his own exertions. He struggled along, as many a poor boy is doing to-day, and eventually obtained a fair education and was admitted to the bar, where he achieved a high position.

Wm. Henry Harrison's father was by no means rich, but a Virginia planter in comfortable circumstances. He was a signer of the Declaration of Independence. The son entered the army early and his accounts as Commissary may now be seen in the Treasury Department, and are at once specimens clerical skill. He occupied several trusts in civil life. John Taylor was the son of an emi-

in moderate circumstances, and was a clerk in a store. He subsequently studied law and was a member of the Tennessee Legislature for five terms. He was fourteen years in Congress, and, refusing a re-election, was chosen Governor of his State. Zachary Taylor was the son of poor parents. His father was Colonel Richard Taylor, who won distinction in the Revolution. He emigrated to Kentucky soon after his son's birth. The sen's life, after leaving the plantation, was spent in the army. He was on duty in Louisana when elected President, and he remained at his post until he came to Washington to be inaugura-

Millard Fillmore was of the humblest origin, and his early life was spent in close poverty. He served an apprenticeship of five years to the fuller's trade. He subsequently educated himself and became a lawyer.

Franklin Pierce was the son of General Benjamin Pierce, a Revolutionary officer. He taught school and studied law, but as a lawyer he was not distinguished. He was in both houses of Congress, and when he entered that body was the youngest member of the Senate. He was a brigadier general in the Mexican War.

James Buchanan was the son of an Irishman from the county of Donegal, who early settled in Pennsylvania. He studied law, held several offices in the State, was in both houses of Congress and Minister to England. His public life was long and active.

Abraham Lincoln, as everybody knows, was a rail-splitter and flatboatman, who educated himself, became a great lawyer and was in Congress. As a writer of the English language he had no superior.

Andrew Johnson was of the lowest origin. He learned the trade of a tailor and was so ignorant when he arrived at man's estate that he could neither read nor write. His wife taught him both after he was married. He was in the State Legislature and in both houses of
