JAY GOULD'S LAST SCHEME.

A New Venture on His Western Roads which Concerns the Traveller. Jay Gould's latest exhibit in railroad ventures is the introduction upon his Western roads of a new car seat, which may result in revolutionizing the whole system now in vogue of seating and sleeping the travelling public. His purpose, should the experiment prove satisfactory, is to place upon his pas-senger cars a seat which will serve for the present day coach and at night can be converted into upper and lower sleeping berths, with the comfort and accommodation now provided on the ordinary sleeper. This improvement will eventually be used for all classes of travel, from the first-class passenger to the emigrant, the only difference being in the upholstery and finish, which will of course be regulated according to the rate or fare paid. To first-class travel Mr. Gould sees a way of supplying seating and sleeping accommodations with the present extra and rather heavy tariff for sleepers avoided, and at the same time he seeks to gain the pecuniary advantage which will naturally come to the roads introducing the new system. The new idea known as A. J. Smith's reversible sleeping car seat was brought to the notice of Mr. Gould a short time ago. The principle adopted is the same as that employed in the ordinary iron car seat, occupying no more space than the common seat, and therefore can be introduced into old as well as new cars. The reversible upholstered backs are high and soft, and consequently are very com-fortable for reclining upon when sit-ting up during the day. Each seat has a double cushion, which makes it more desirable for day travel. Under the cushion is a folding box, giving ample room for bedding of all kinds, curtains, head and foot board, and other paraphernalia incident to railway sleeping accommodations. An adjustable table is provided for each seat, which, by the use of a neatly executed bracket, fasuse of a neatly executed bracket, fastened upon the side of the car, can be used for a single or double seat, so that one, two, three or four persons can sit at the one table at will. The curtains for each berth are separate and distinct, whereby a passenger above desiring to retire can draw his curtains without inconveniencing his fellow traveller below. The change from a day car to a sleeper is complete, and were all on board to retire at the same time, that change would be almost instantaneous. change would be almost instantaneous, so simple and easy is the contrivance. The bed of the lower berth, when made up, is ten inches, and the upper berth three feet and eight inches from the floor of the car, bringing all the weight below the middle line of the car and swaying motion which is so annoying to travellers. The occupant enjoys the advantage of being able to sit upright in either upper or lower berth. Every person occupying a seat is supplied with sleeping accommodations, and on the receipt of a comparatively nominal sum a company could supply a passenger with a single berth to himself should he desire it. should he desire it.

Under orders from Jay Gould the inventor is shipping from Philadelphia a number of the new seats to the Missouri Pacific Railway Company for use on first class cars, while a lot is also beon first class cars, while a l

Sunday morning last, about 9 o'clock, Capt. W. J. Stanley, a prominent law-yer of that place, requested his wife to leave the room in which they happened to be at that time, and she complied, soon after which she heard the pop of a cap in the room she had left. She hurried to the door and tried to open it, when she found that it was locked from the inside, and while vainly endeavoring to unfasten the bolt she was shocked by the report of a pistol in the room where she had just parted with her husband. She gave the alarm and a crowd soon collected, when the door was forced open and Capt. Stanley was found prostrate upon the floor, welter-ing in his blood, which was flowing free-

Capt. Stanley is represented to have been a man of some considerable means, was in no wise pressed financially, his domestic relations were of the most pleasant character, and the only cause that can be assigned for the desperate deed is the course of dissipation.
