Law and Liquor. To the Editor of The Observer. Nearly every one who reads anything at all reads Dickens' novels. The fearful evils resulting from the corruption of laws which were once just and equitable, is shown in his description of the "circumlocution office," in "Bleak House." Poor Rich Carstone's death from a broken heart, poor little Miss Flite's insanity, are but two instances of the hundreds of thousands who went to ruin by way of this immense fraud, the circumlocution office—or English court of chancery. From the wrongs of these multiplies of the second of t off triumphant at last, these officers had to give up many legal, but most iniqui-They knew themselves that the day of darkness was past, and that they, the legalized vultures, who had fattened on the woes of the people, need not of reform for years (1824-25-26) and came resist the influences of the people, need not resist the influences of moral life and light any longer. Morally, Brougham was one of the bravest men.

"Even Romilly" observes Sir E. Wilmot, page 11, "who had an influence in Parliament still greater than that of Brougham had shrunk from an at Brougham, had shrunk from an attempt to drag to light, (so powerful were their champions) the abuses and iniquities of that court. Year after year, on the contrary, did Brougham fearlessly reiterate his attacks, until the work of reformation became easier in his own hands; and the novel spec-tacle arose of a Lord Chancellor's first act being to diminish his own emolu-

Other reforms followed and we who feel but little sympathy with suffering we have never realized, can scarcely believe what enormities were practiced in law courts, authorized by legislative authority, within the recollection of persons now living. Prisoners, except in cases of treason and misdemeanor, were not allowed the benefit of counsel. The first attempt to remedy this inhuman cruelty was in 1825. Mr. George Lamb, supported by Brougham, brought in the bill. It was rejected by a majority of 30. Another effort was made in 1826—deteated by a majority of 69. Eight years passed and another effort was made—again a failure. The next year, 1885, another attempt failed, and in 1836 the last, final and victorious contest, was the signal of a new reign of

Until a comparatively recent date, a paltry act of pilfering (to the value of five shillings) was punishable with death! Only think of it, ye who enact laws for your helpless fellow creatures! An instance is on record of a poor woman stealing a piece of silk out of a shop and selling it to procure food for her starving children. She was hung for it. And this in England, within the present century! "The land cannot be cleasned from blood, except by the blood of them that shed it," says the voice of unerring wisdom, and that poor woman's blood rests guiltily, to this day, upon the land.

These laws were iniquitous, but they right and justice.

These laws were iniquitous, but they were innocent in comparison with the laws which grant licenses to manufacture and to sell, intoxicating liquors. Oh, for an American Henry Brougham to devote his life to law-reform, in this and other matters, some fearless, able, and other matters, some fearless, able, conscientious man as a leader, who will patiently persist and carry his point through all opposition.

Sidney Smith is best known to us as a wit, but he was also an earnest reformer. The following is an extract from one of his speeches. Brougham became Lord Chancellor in 1830:

"Then, look at the gigantic Brougham, sworn in at twelve o'clock, and before six p. m. he has a bill on the table abolishing the abuses of a court which has been the curse of England for centuries. For twenty-five long years did Lord Eldon (B's predecessor,) sit in that court, surrounded with misery and sorrow, which he never misery and sorrow, which he never held up a finger to alleviate. The widow and the orphan cried to him as vainly as the town-crier when he offers a small reward for a full purse. The Dankrupt of the court became the lunatic of the court. Estates mouldered away and mansions fell down, but the fees came in, and all was well; but in one instant the iron mace of Brougham shivered to atoms this house of fraud and delay."

For not only centuries, but milleniums, liquor has been the curse of the human race. The law has protected this monstrous serpent, allowing it to crush in its deadly folds innumerable men, women and children. Talk of the court of Chancery driving people to suicide and insanity! For every one victim of that vile court the serpent alcohol numbers thousands! The lunatic asylums are filled with them—the jails are filled with them—the poor houses are filled with them—the grave yards are filled with them—alas, is not the pit of eternal perdition filled with Bumble, the beadle, when informed that the law required him to govern his wife, replied, "Then the law is a fool, and a bachelor besides!" I add to this indignant charge, that the law is, in many cases, an unmitigated scoundrel. The law has no conscience—no fear of God before its eyes—no compassion—no justice—when it protects the manufacture and sale of liquor.

N. Y. Herald Cer. about starting for his horse-back ride. Blaine was going home in his carriage. Garfield looked strong, but pale. When weary he has an Africanesque tinge in his face and his eyelids hang heavily. He seemed tired, but, as ever, good natured. Blaine walked with difficulty. His hair is as white as snow. Great bags hang beneath his eyes, and impatience gnaws his soul as certainly as gout cramps his limbs. What a lesson to the youth of the land! Two mea on the very toppermost branch uneasy lest they fall.

An Eccentric Aristocrat.

New York Sun. Lord Dunmore is deidedly that "homme universel," of whose existence somewhere in some remote corner of the globe Jean Jacques Rousseau felt perfectly convinced. In the full summer and early autumn he may be seen careering in wild exuberance of spirits over the grassy plains of Montana in charge of his countless thousands of beeves, all branded with his cipher. of these multitudes came the livings of the circumlocution officers. But when Lord Brougham fought his long battle his head in true Mexican fashion. In late autumn and early winter you will find him busily engaged in superintending his potteries of Dunmore, where he sends forth vessels of marvellous beauty, all designed by his own hand. In the late winter and early spring he returns to aristocratic life, and gives his calebrated concerts at Abardean House celebrated concerts at Aberdeen House. No fewer than eight members of the royal family were present at the last. He employs La Berre to direct, but in-trusts the orchestral leadership to none but himself; and no one who beholds him in full dress, weilding his delicate baton, can realize the picture of the Mexican whip and lasso, or that of the potter's wheel and mallet.

A Down Town Merchant, Having passed several sleepless nights, disturb ed by the agonies and cries of a suffering child, and becoming convinced that Mrs. Winelew's Soothing Syrup was just the article needed, procured a supply for the child. On reaching home and acquainting his wife with what he had done, she refused to have it administered to the child. and acquainting his wife with what he had done, she refused to have it administered to the child, as she was strongly in favor of Homeopathy. That night the child passed in suffering, and the parents without sleep. Returning home the day following, the father found the baby still worse; and while contemplating another sleepless night, the mother stepped from the room to attend to some domestic duties, and left the father with the child. During her absence he administered a portion of the Soothing Syrup to the baby, and said nothing. That night all hands slept well; and the little fellow awoke in the morning bright and happy. The mother was delighted with the sudden and wonderful change, and although at first offended at the deception practiced upon her, has continued to use the Syrup, and suffering crying bables and restless nights have disappeared. A single trial of the Syrup never yet failed to relieve the baby, and overcome the prejudices of the mother. Sold by all Druggists. 25 cents a bottle.

SLOO REVARD

I met Senator Conkling this afternoon in his light wagon. His companion was the sturdy Vice President. Both were laughing and looked like daisies. I could refrain from mentally contrasting their unconstrained and cheerful appearance with that of the President as they came down to the door of the White House together. Garfield was about starting for his horse-back ride. Blaine was going home in his carriage.
