Love's Smile.
'Tis lovely when two trembling stars
Greet each other in the azure skies,
And sweet it is to see two roses
Look blushing in each other's eyes;
But there is still another vision
Which the soul can more beguile,
'Tis two hearts, by Love united,
Blessed by Heaven's eternal smile.

A ROYAL DRESS-MAKER.
Home-Life and Work of German Imperial Princess.
From the Berliner Tageblatt.
Princess Frederic Leopold, 15 years and months of age, son of Prince Frederick Charles, is diligently attending his riding and drilling lessons. At about noon he may be seen every day leaving the Royal Palace in civilian dress, high cavalry boots, carrying a riding whip and accompanied by his military governor, walking to the menage in the Breiten Strasse, where he mounts one of the picked horses of his imperial granduncle, and for full an hour goes through his equestrian course under the stern tutorage of Ridingmaster Major Meyer. At this drill the Princess handles a cadet Mauser rifle, his drill-master being a gigantic corporal of the body-company of the First Regiment of the Guards. The young Princesses are by no means allowed to neglect their physical development. The three youngest daughters of the Crown Prince, Princess Victoria, Sophie and Margaretha, are practicing gymnastics at least three times a week under the direction of Major Von Dresky, chief instructor at the Military Central Gymnasium. They take their lessons at the crown-principally Palace, and are not only proficient in the various exercises, but appear very much to their advantage in their pretty English gymnastic costumes. These latter are the productions of a "home industry," which is established at the palace, and runs no less than thirteen sewing machines "for the confection of the everyday dresses of the young Princesses as well as their august mother, who herself makes the designs and superintends the work. In an emergency this imperial dress-making establishment does not at all shrink from venturing on the manufacture of more sumptuous and complicated gowns. It was only the other day that the Crown Prince was shown a variety of handsome but expensive costumes for his spouse and that he deliberately but pleasantly remarked to the head of one of our exchanges, "These prices are too high for me! My wife would be anything but pleased if I were to spend so much money for a dress. She is far too practical in that respect—she prefers to buy the material herself and have it made up at home."

Which is a Sequel to Historical Legislation of over 30 Years Ago.
New York, May 11.—The suit of the Liverpool and Philadelphia Steamship Company, against the commissioners of emigration of the State of New York for recovery of over one million dollars, paid as head money on European emigrants transported here by the company, came on in the United States circuit court before Judge Shipman today. This suit is a sequel to historical legislation over thirty years ago, in which most of the emigration counsel, such as Daniel Webster, Rufus Choate, D. B. Ogden and John Van Buren were enlisted. United States Supreme Court Chief Justice Taney and all the associate justices, except Mr. Justice Nelson, wrote elaborate opinions for or against the constitutionality of taxes in 1877. The present suit was instituted in 1878. Congress passed an act invalidating the collection of all head moneys and declaring that no suits should be maintained for the recovery of moneys so paid or collected. On argument of the case Messrs. Alexander and Green argued for the company that it was entitled to recover the money, first as involuntary payment and secondly as made under a mistake of foreign law by the plaintiff, who was a foreign corporation. It was also contended that the act of Congress cutting off the plaintiff's suit was unconstitutional. On behalf of the commissioners of emigration, Messrs. Lewis and George N. Sanders, it was argued that head moneys were levied and expended for the benefit of emigrants, and were collected by the steamship companies, had no equitable claim to the money; that the act of Congress validating the collection of head money tax was unconstitutional because the consent of Congress was all that was lacking to make it valid. Judge Shipman decided in favor of the commissioners of emigration and dismissed the complaint. The company will appeal. The amount involved in this and other similar suits is over $2,000,000.

Woman vs Whiskey
Women are earnest workers in behalf of the temperance movement. As they are the greatest sufferers from the evils of intemperance, it is right and proper for them to do all in their power to check, if not stop, its destructive course. As will be seen by the following table from one of our exchanges, they performed some effective work in the late municipal elections in Illinois: The returns thus far published of the recent municipal elections in Illinois show that the women won some notable triumphs, which are perhaps the omens of greater and more important victories in the future. The question of temperance was a leading one in the canvass, and, as may be expected, the Prohibitionists. The enthusiasm with which they worked and the numbers in which they turned out showed the keen interest they took in the subject. In one of the towns, the ladies appeared at the polls and succeeded in electing three out of fourteen aldermen. At Mount Vernon all their candidates were elected by a majority of five hundred, and in other portions of the State their efforts were crowned with more or less success.

Some Country Beer-Drinkers.
Dryden, (N. Y.) Dispatch to New York Sun.
A civil-dress suit, in a case where a man was alleged to have become intoxicated on lager beer, just tried here, has brought to light a wonderful capacity for lager or swearing. Jas. Swart testified that he had drank fifty-four glasses of lager in twelve hours and was not drunk. He thought lager would intoxicate if kept on hand long. Ben Taylor swore that he sometimes drank two or three gallons a day, and he never saw anybody drunk on lager unless they mixed it with some other drink. Charles Schultz was the last witness and the greatest drinker of all. He testified that he had drank seventy-five glasses of lager between 7 and 10 o'clock of an evening. He had swallowed four gallons in a day, and in summer he always drank two or three gallons a day, and was never drunk in his life. The jury at once returned a verdict of $200 for the plaintiff.

How Mrs. Vanderbilt's Brooch was Bought for Fifty Cents.
New York Tribune.
Daniel O'Reilly, age twenty, son of a stage-driver on the Madison Avenue Line, is employed by C. W. Matherson, a florist, at No. 673 Sixth avenue. Tuesday his mother suggested that he should buy a brooch, as the family were about to move. In the afternoon he saw an ash-cart containing two trunks at Fortieth street and Fifth avenue, and finally he purchased one for fifty cents. Opening the trunk a few minutes later, O'Reilly, while rummaging through a pile of papers, found a diamond brooch wrapped in a piece of tissue-paper. O'Reilly says that he counted eighty diamonds in the brooch, and his mother counted seventy-nine. O'Reilly was naturally surprised at his discovery. The trunk bore the initials, "W. H. V., New York," in black letters, and in a baggage paper was the name of Mrs. Vanderbilt, No. 459 Fifth avenue, New York. At the suggestion of a friend, O'Reilly went to the Grand Central depot yesterday morning and related his story to Chauncey M. Depew. One of Mr. Vanderbilt's sons came in, and on hearing the story said that he thought his father had bought the brooch while abroad. O'Reilly returned with the diamonds, which he had left at home, and Mrs. Vanderbilt was out left them with the secretary. When a reward was hinted at by the secretary O'Reilly replied promptly that he did not wish any recompense, but would prefer that his father be assisted. He was told to call at the Vanderbilt residence this morning.
