No More Broken Whalebones.

After spending over twelve thousand dollars in experiments, Dr. Warner has perfected a material for boning corsets called

CORALINE

ITS ADVANTAGES ARE:

FIRST. It cannot be broken. A reward of $5 will be paid for every corset in which the Coraline breaks with six months ordinary wear.

SECOND. It is more pliable than whalebone and adapts itself more readily to the movements of the body.

THIRD. It is not affected by cold, heat or mofe-FOURTH. It is the cheapest and most serviceable corset ever made.

THE CORALINE CORSET is made throughout of superior materials, and is warranted in every respect. If not found entirely satisfactory, the purchase money will be refunded. Ask for

Dr. Warner's Abdominal Corset, With extension front. Unequaled for beauty, ele-gance and style. And OBSERVATIONS.

Now that the "r" months are gone, it may be well to mention to orster eaters that every orster has a mouth, a heart, a liver, a stomach, conningly devised intestines, and other necessary organs.

The following poemlet, says the Galveston Newslet. is excellent of its kind. We do not know the name of the cusslet who wrote it, but if he will drop us a notelet we will give him credit in our next issue:

From off the running rivulet
The loy chain is thawed,
And the flutter of the winglet
Of the dovelet is abroad;

Some of the Republican papers are complaining that when Frederick Douglass goes into office he carries his tamily with him in this business, Douglass simply follows the example of some of his prominent Republican fri. nds.

"Poor husband, how I do wish you did not have to slave so hard from morning till night!" murmured his wife, as with a fond caress she seated herself on her husband's knee, and gently stroked the auburn locks from his lofty brow. And the grave, stern business man understood her at once, and seated "Wall what to the bound or what?"

and said: "Well, what is It—a bonnet, or what? Don't be too hard on me; money is scarce. Strike light." A Cincinnati organist played "She is Fooling Thee" at a recent wedding in that city. It is hard-ly necessary to state that he is married.

A New York politician, in writing a letter of con-dolence to the widow of a congressman who had been his friend, says: "I am sorry to hear that W—— has gone to heaven. We were bosom friends, but now we shall never meet again."

The "boom" in railway securities is well shown in the estate of the late Asa Packer. When he died, about a year ago his estate, which consisted mainly of railway securities, was inventoried at $6,000,600, and produced a revenue of $300,000. Now, it has grown to $7,486,055, and the revenue to $471,-053, simply by the increase in the value of railway stock.

Col. F. A. Conkling told the New York Chamber of Commerce Thursday in a speech upon the duty levied on sugar that he had heard that one firm had paid $100,000 to a member of Congress—one of the reports makes Mr. Conkling say a member of the committee on ways and means—to prevent legislation on this subject. Col. Conkling ought not to go so far without going a great deal farther.

The stockholders of the Chester and Lenoir Narrow Gauge Railroad held a meeting at Lincolnton, North Carolina, last Thursday. The reports of the president and treasurer show that the gross receipts had increased about $8,000 over last year. The meeting directed the president to continue the building of the road in the direction of Newton in sections of five miles, upon the sale of a sufficient number of bonds.

When the excellence of rice as a diet is fully understood its use will be more frequent and of daily occurance in every household. At this season of the year especially, it may properly be classed as superior to any of the cereals which are in such general use for the morning and midday meals. No other food is so easy of digestion, and at its present cost it is cheaper than potatoes, oat-meal or grain-grits of any kind.— The Grocer.

First Working of Cotton.

A practical cotton planter writes that light stirring of the earth about young plants makes them grow off better, but deep ploughing, before the roots have stuck down well in the soil, disturbes and injures them. If rains have fallen and crust formed since cotton was planted, "run around" it as soon as it is up. A light harrow is the very be done without danger of loosing a "stand." The sooner all competing stalks are gotten out of the way the bet-ter. If the cotton will not bear bring-ing near a stand at this first working, run over very rapidly, so as to get back a second time as quickly as possi-ble. Bringing to the final stand at the earliest moment is extremely important with a cotton crop. If the soil is hard the second ploughing may be deep and thorough, but all subsequent ones should be light.

Nature's Sinice-way. No Place Like Home.

Augusta Chronicle and Constitutionalist Journeying homeward, we met a North Carolinian who had made for his own personal satisfaction, an extensive tour of the Western country. He did not go there for the purpose of settling in any event, but simply to see and hear what was to be seen and heard for practical purposes of comparison He had been born in the old North State and lived upon the farm his father had purchased early in life. This inheritance was his pride. It was dear to him from every association that can warm the heart of man. It was indeed sacred soil, the more sacred because of the difficulty he had, during and since the war, to keep it intact as it reached him from the bands of his sire. From it he had earned a comfortable support, and under its roof-tree he had married a good woman and reared a sturdy flock of children. Having some leisure and spare cash, for he is a thorough farmer, he determined to emerge from his patriarchal surroundings and journey to the lands of which he had heard so much, the lands that stretch toward the rocky spine of the continent and the setting sun. His project had been accomplished when we saw him, and he eagerly looked forward to the hour that ermitted him to stand upon the glebe he loved and to be once more in the presence of his family. He came back from his trip more satisfied than ever with the South and that portion of it where he lived and hoped to die. He had seen much rich land and more that was poor, and his decided conviction was that the South was immeasurably the better country for happiness and comfort, especially to all who own land and are skillful enough to win a competence from it. He was also convinced that our people are not matched anywhere in certain moral, natural and humanizing traits, that lift mankind above the merely sensual and ma-terial. We found out that he was a The known exports of oleomargarine from New York last year amounted to 11,000,000 pounds, of which Rotterdam safe and then raised cotton as a surplus product. He bought sparingly of manures of commerce, but understood how to combine them with the elemental substances within every farmer's reach. He found stock raising profitable; and, not to weary with particulars, he was the type of a well-to-do Southern country man, who conducted his agricultural operations by a system realize an abundant harvest, because he knew how first to feed himself and he knew how first to feed himself and then make crops for ready money. Having started out right, he prospered by moving on the road of genuine success, and never deviating from it. He needed but one more drop in his cup of content to make it overflow, and that was granted when he returned from the Western lands, with their teeming industries assured that the South, with its warmhearted population, unrivalled climate. hearted population, unrivalled climate, awakening glory and golden future was much more desirable than any other section for men like himself.

This man was but a unit of thousands who have, under very serious disadvantages, clung to their inheritance and appreciate it the more because it has been the battle ground of their existence as well as the shrine of their affections. Forth from his humble home the moody Southern farmer may gaze Westward and wish that he could break his environment here and begin another life in the land beyond. But let such a one be warned that God has been better to be warned that God has been better to him than he can be made to believe at once; that he will find no land that is better than his own, no people more to his taste, and no country with a future of equal brightness. This thought should rouse all men who are momentarily cast down, and give them a proper appreciation of the South. Very soon, the tide of immigration will turn from the West to the South. It will never be from South to West, except in the cases of deluded colored people, now the cases of deluded colored people, now and then. Professional men may possibly better themselves occasionally, under exceptional conditions, by gravitating to the great metropolitan centres; but these are rare illustrations. The Southerner who has a farm or any kind of industrial enterprise will find, in a large majority of cases, that his true destiny and best mission are right where he is, and that he may search the world over for a better place than the South and fail to discover it, though he journey from "Indus to the Pole."

During the ceremonies at the New York Acadamy of Music on the evening of Decoration day, Major-General Doubleday met Bishop Stevens, of South Crrolina. General Doubleday, in his speech stated that twenty years ago he aimed the first gun fired in the war at the Confederate cause—referring to Fort Sumter; and that twenty years ago Bishop Stevens, then in command of Stevens Battery. Charlesten harbor, aimed the first gun of the war against the United States flag, waving over the Star of the West, which came with reinforcements to Fort Sumter, and that he offered him his hand as a token of the reconciliation between the North and the South, as exemplified in his appearance at the Academy to do honor to the Union dead. The audience, at the request of the presiding officer, Major-General Sickles, rose en masse and ratified the contract by enthusiastic applause. Good Till the Next Election.
