OUT OF ITS HOLE.

The managers of the Republican party in this State have at last emerged from the big hole in which they hid themselves and have resolved to come square out on the anti-prohibition side. We herewith publish the circular privately addressed to those who may "help the cause," by Dr. J. J. Mott, chairman of the State Republican Executive Committee, and collector of internal Revenue. As a collector of revenue he inspires, but as chairman he distributes it. Here it is in all its pristine beauty and originality;

ROOMS REP. Ex. COM., Raleigh, N. C., June 10, 1880. DEAR SIR: The Republican party, through its State executive committee, takes ground against what is known as the "Prohibition" movement in this State, because of the legislation it contains against citizen rights, and in favor of rank and classes.

As a party, we cannot stand with folded arms and see the liberties of the people subverted, and one class of citizens preferred above another. The paid emissaries of fanatical error and political trickery combined, are about to be sent abroad in the State, to help fasten upon our people this dangerous enact-ment of a Democratic Legislature, this wolf in sheep's clothing—"Prohibition." We must meet these emissaries with the overwhelming arguments that can be used against this strike at Liberty

If you feel disposed to assist the party in this effort, send your contribution to me at Raleigh, at once.

J. J. MOTT, Chm'n Rep. Ex. Com. It is not our intention here to criticise this document, nor to notice its false assertions, but simply to record the fact that the Republican party, throwing off its disguise, has resolved to become the champion of the antiprohibition movement.

The question is, what effect will this have on the election? Our opinion is it will result in driving into the prohibition ranks, and out of the Republican party, thousands of honest, conscientious men who have been acting with that party, who will be disgusted with this false, hypocritical, and demagogical course. It will perhaps hold the main body of colored voters, as that party always does, but the white vote will scatter from it. It will fail also in receiving the number of votes from men who have voted the Democratic be very interesting to the heirs if they | ticket and who have been opposed to the enactment of prohibitory laws. use them, will halt and fall without further parley into the prohibition ranks. They will not work with the Republican party, nor under the leadership of men like Dr. Mott, Mr. Canaday and others who here constitute themselves can party of the seeing is undoubtedly the proper pursuit of mankind. [Laughter.] There may be some disappointments, because there are fewer places to fill than men willing to fill them. But in the main the general principles and policy of the spokesmen of the Republican or-

> Instead of injuring the cause of prohibition our candid opinion is they help it by coming out against it. To this extent they have forced it into politics. notwithstanding the fact that the Deling it with politics in any way, while the better class of Republicans agreed with the Democrats in keeping it out of politics. The responsibility for forcing it in and making it a party matter belongs to the Republican managers, and they must assume the responsibility. Whether Dr. Mott can get enough of the kind or "arguments" referred to in the conclusion of this interesting document remains to be seen, but we would advise those interested to be careful of their charge lest it be squandered in a hopeless cause.

SHERMAN VERESUS SHERMAN.

The burning of Columbia has again become the subject of discussion. Mr. Jefferson Davis in his "Rise and Fall of the Confederacy," says that "I (he) could not value the good opinion of the man who, in regard to the burning years ago, and two hundred of the five of Columbia, made a false charge hundred feet in height intended, have against Gen. Wade Hampton, and, having left it to circulate freely for ten dred men at work on it. Maryland | years, then in his published memoirs makes this disgraceful admission:

'In my official report of this conflagration I distinctly charged it to Gen. Wade Hampton, and confess I did so pointedly, to shake the faith of his people in him, etc."

This statement seems to have put Gen. Sherman on his mettle, and in a good deal of wind in the neighborhood | public speech made before the re-union of the veteran soldiers of the Army of the Potomac, held in Hartford, Conn., on last Wednesday, he said in the

Mr. Davis was not in Columbia and 20 in the negative. structures, that the fire department was | during that fire nor was General Hampton; I was and so was General O.O. Howard. So were General John A. Logan, General William B. Wood, now a Justice of the Supreme Court, and his brother, General Charles Wood and 14,000 honest, good, true, Union soldiers. Mr. Davis ignored all these and adopts the solitary statement of Wade Hampton who got away and was not there at all after his troops had set fire to the bridges, depot and cotton in the when our troops entered the city. In the second volume of "Sherman's Memoirs," written by himself, on page 222, will be found a letter from Major-General Halleck, the Chief-of-Staff, written on the 18th day of December to General Sherman, then at Savannah. Ga., and dated at Headquarters of the Army at Washington, D. C. The concluding paragraph of this letter is as follows: "Should you capture Charleston, I hope that by some accident the place may be destroyed, and if a little salt should be sown upon its site, it may prevent the growth of future crops of nulification and secession. Yours, truly, H. W. HALLECK, Major-General, Chief-of-Staff. General Sherman's answer will be found at page 226. It is dated at Savannah, Ga., Dec. 24th, 1864. In it he says: "I will bear in mind your hint as to Charleston, and do not think 'salt' will be necessary. When I move, the fifteenth corps will be on the right of the right wing, and their position will naturally bring them into Charleston first; and if you have watched the history of that corps you will have remarked that they generally do their work pretty well. The truth is the whole army is burning with an insatiable desire to wreak vengeance upon South Carolina. I almost tremble at her fate, but I feel that she deserves all that seems in store for her. Many and many a person in Georgia asked me why we did not go into South Carolina; and when I answered that we were en route for that State the invalidable reply was 'well if you will make those people real the utmost severities of war, we will pardon you for your desolation of Georgia.' I look upon Columbia is quite as bad as Charleston, and I doubt if we shall spare the public buildings there as we did at Milledgeville."

Here we see that General Sherman receives a "hint" from the headquarters of the army in an official letter that it is desirable that Charleston should be destroyed. In his reply he conveys virtual assurance that this will be done. but at the same time that "Columbia as quite as bad," and doubts "if we shall spare the public buildings as we did at Milledgeville." Accordingly Columbia is burned. Had any citizen of South Carolina threatened publicly to kill any one of Gen. Sherman's officers and that officer had been found murdered and the prisoner been proven to have been the same night in company with the deceased, can any one doubt that General Sherman would have executed him? Would any one question the justice of the punishment? The principles of evidence do not vary with cases, and the case seems quite as strong against General Sherman as in the one supposed.

SHERMAN'S LITTLE SPEECH. Senator Sherman presided over the Republican State convention which met at Cleveland, Ohio, last Wednesday, and on taking the chair made a day, and on taking the chair made a gro employee on engineer Blake's train, little speech. After complimenting was killed near Selma. He was a new Fester and saying some nice things about the platform and the success of the Republican party, he turned his attention to Mr. Conkling, whose name, however, he avoided mentioning. We quote this portion of his speech: There are some other things, my countrymen, about Ohio politics. We have no room in this country for a leader who commands and dictates. [Great applause.] We have a great people. Our conventions are gathered from all parts of our broad State, brought here as freemen. There never has been and there never will be room for a primate or boss. The man who attempts it had better make his will beforehand. [Applause.] And, fellow Many of these, seeing the trap laid to citizens, I congratulate you upon the the general principles and policy of this administration are in harmony with the aspirations of the Republican

Senator Sherman is not in love with Conkling because the 106 at Chicago spoiled his game and wrested from him the prize for which he had struggled so hard and which at one time he looked upon as almost within his grasp. He "bossed" it then pretty heavily and through his tools holding federal positions in the South, stocked

"Don't Hurt Aggie."

An exceedingly ludicrous incident, not to be found in the accepted Shakes-pearian text of "Richard IIL." took place last evening at the Bush Street Theatre during the performance of the above tragedy. The play had reached the conclusion of the second act without interruption, but during the following act, and just at a climax, the even tenor of the performance was for the time being seriously disturbed. Mrs. Hayden, wife of the manager of the Keene troupe, sat in the left-hand stage box, with the tragedian's son, a little box, with the tragedian's son, a little boy of some nine years of age, who was leaning against the rail looking about the audience, and giving an occasional glance at the people on the stage. Gloster (Keene) was disclosing the coolness of his former passion to Lady Ann, a character assumed by Miss Agues Keene, the daughter of the tragedian, and in following out the business of the character, rudely seizes Lady Ann by the arm and violently pulls her across the stage. Attracted by the loud tone of voice in which his father was declaiming, young Keene bestrode the rail, and, seeing his Keene bestrode the rail, and, seeing his

The virtues of the waters of the different springs have been known in this and adjoining States for centuries. But not until within the last year has there been any accommodations for visitors. We claim and insist, and prominent physicians sustain us in the assertion, that more chronic cases are cured by these waters than any other springs in this section of the country. There are four springs with different properties, each one containing more or less sulphur, iron, and magnesia, and one of them contains arsenic.
