At the summer season: First week, in going to showing your dresses; second week, in talking where you went last year; third week, in talking about the flowers and the garden; fourth week, in complaints of the house; after the fourth week life at a summer resort is insupportably dull.

A Victim of the Bottle.

A well dressed little boy between ten and twelve years of age, was taken to the Western police station on Tuesday and asked Lieutenant Cadwallader if there was a "large lady in the lockup."

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

How many suffer torturing day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret action of piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost every one who will use Simmons' Liver Regulator.

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger.

This distressing affliction, known as constipation, is a common ailment, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the bowels, accompanied with disagreeable humors, and a consequent, what is popularly known as sick headache.

Speaking at the banquet given in his honor by the press in Toronto, Prof. Goodwin Smith said: Writing an editorial is, as you know, not the easiest matter in the world, but there are many who think they can do it until they try.

SENATOR HILL ON DAVIS' BOOK.

The Relations Between Mr. Davis and General Lee.

In a conversation with a newspaper interviewer a few days ago, Senator Hill, of Georgia, defended in most respects Mr. Davis' "History of the War," and criticised the policy of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston in the conduct of his campaign from Dalton to Atlanta.

"I have read with a great deal of amusement much of the stuff that has been printed about the two years from 1863, the two houses of the Confederate Congress created a joint committee to inquire into the condition of the army, and the means of continuing the war."

"The committee upon the part of the Senate. That committee held secret sessions, and examined almost every prominent man in the Confederacy from Jeff Davis down."

"He explained that Grant's forces were constantly increasing, and that he had unlimited supplies of men and munitions, both of which Gen. Lee lacked."

"The hero raised himself in the chair, and with a great deal of feeling said: 'By no means, sir; by no means. In a military point of view I would be stronger after than before such an attack as that would enable me to make my own plan of campaign and battle. From a moral and political point of view the abandonment or loss of Richmond would be a serious calamity, but when it has fallen I believe I do not have the war for two years on Virginia soil. Ever since the conflict began I have been obliged to permit the enemy to make my plans for me, because compelled to defend the capital. In connection with this I shall be able to make them for myself.'"

"This emphatic statement shaped the report of the committee in favor of continuing the war, and ought to settle the point of argument that Lee never thought of surrendering until he found that he could not get his army out and was obliged to."

"Was Davis angry at Lee's surrender?"

"Not that I know of. I have talked with Mr. Davis fully once only since the war. Not more than two years ago I spent a whole day with him, and I never heard him say an unkind word or utter a disparaging remark of Gen. Lee in my life. In fact the relations between himself and Lee were not only harmonious, but cordial to the last."

A SPIDER TRAP.

How He Sometimes Constructs a Balloon and Makes It Buoyant.

If you anchor a pole in a body of water, leaving the pole above the surface, and put a spider upon it, he will exhibit its marvelous intelligence in his plan to escape. At first he will spin a web several inches long and hang to one end, while he allows the other to float off in the wind in the hope that it will strike some object. Of course this plan proves a failure, but the spider is not discouraged. He waits until the wind changes and then sends another silken bridge floating off in another direction.

Another failure is followed by several other attempts until the spider, tired of the compass have been tried. But neither the resources nor the reasoning powers of the spider are exhausted.

He climbs to the top of the pole and charges it with silk to construct a silken balloon. He uses no air with which to inflate it, but he has the power of making it buoyant. When he gets his balloon finished he does not go upon the mere supposition that it will carry him, as most often do, but he tests it to a guy rope, the other end of which he attaches to the island pole upon which he is a prisoner. He then gets into his aerial vehicle while it is made fast and tests it to see whether the dimensions are capable of bearing his weight. He often finds he has made it too small, in which case he hauls it down, takes it all apart and constructs it on a larger and better plan.

A spider has been seen to hang by different balloons before he became satisfied with his experiments. Then he will get in, snap the guy rope and sail away to land as gracefully and as supremely independent of his surroundings as could well be imagined.
