The lines. fact that he was stricken down at his post in the base, stealthy manner in which he was, created a sentiment of abhorrence and disgust, and with it begot a sentiment of sorrow and sympathy, which grew stronger and more universal as the days on his bed increased in number. His story had been read the world over, and all lands became familiar with the daily incidents of the sick chamber, where doctors exhausted their skill against death, and one of the most devoted of wives stood and watched, knelt and prayed, full of

But time was, and that not many years ago, when such world-sympathy would have been impossible; before the corners of the earth were linked together by sea-cables, months would have elapsed ere the story of the tragedy would have reached some lands, and weeks before it would have reached any beyond the water. But the cable—the lightning flying along ocean's bed-tells the story in Europe where it is known, with all its tragic details, almost as soon as in the suburbs of the city in which it was done, and thus distant countries became, as it were, actual witnesses of the scene; are brought close to it, and are shocked and horrified even as those were who heard the ring of the pistol and saw the victim fall. Thus science draws the families of nations together in closer union and in closer kin.

Even Dr. Boynton described the dead a few years ago, and a better, more libit a new idea to have a North Caro-President's face as "horrible and shock- eral enlightened and cosmopolitan spir- lina "system" in which Charlotte is to ing." And then comes the press-that tireless agent of universal educationteaching the masses and lifting them from the lower plane they moved upon ooo speculative insurance on his life. the sovereignty of man, which has made America the greatest of republics and the greatest of nations. They have seen the republic tried in ordeals archy under the sun and have seen her come out of her trial stronger and greater than ever, demonstrating in ly letter upon the President's case. He striking style the power of a free, intelligent people to be their own rulers And thus all men, who longed to be free, took an interest in the republic where freedom lived, and in him who was, for the time being, its chosen chief magistrate. American ideas of government spread, liberalizing the old world and wiping out many of the distinctive and oppressive institutions that former ages of despotism had handed down. There is thrice the individual liberty in Europe to-day that there was a quarter of a century ago, while in remote China and Japan, which were then locked up to the outside world, men are beginning to look up, and the school to talk for them and speak of the progress of the future.

France became republicanized, England is becoming so, while in Germany, Russia, Italy, Spain and other lands, a powerful element is engaged in the battle for man and against the throne. The tendency in England today is for self-government, and it may not be many years before the throne will disappear and the republic take its place, and as in England so in other lands, for with the march of intelligence, the education of the masses the awe of and veneration for thrones disappear and man's rights and sovereignty is claimed and asserted. Thus a com. mon bond between those people and the republic which they learned to regard as the model of their aspirations for freedom grew a common bond, which made them love it, and revere him who presided over its destinies. It was not the man Garfield, nor the ruler, but President Garfield, the presiding magistrate and the representative man of the greatest republic and freest country on the face of the earth, to whom Europe bowed and paid its splendid tributes of respect-tributes to him and also to his country.

Treatment of the Dead President. It appears to be inevitable that a bitter and in all probability a prolonged controversy will take place on the subject of the treatment of the case of the late President and the conduct of the autopsy of his remains. Already those who were in attendance on him in one made America the greatest of republics and the greatest of nations. They denounce the treatment of the case and the report of the autopsy, and indicates that he will soon make public a full statement of the true nature of the case from the beginning to the end on his own responsibility. The physicians officially in charge say that in a short time they will make a supplementary report on the autopsy, covering every point and feature in detail, but if it takes them as long in proportion to make it up in such shape to secure all their signatures as it did to fix up the first and only report so far, it will be some time before the public have the opportunity, to peruse it. It is said also, and on the authority of those who had every means of knowing, that many of the statements given out as to the favorable condition of the President and the bright remarks attributed to him were, to put the most favorable construction on it, erroneous; that for thirty or forty days before his death the President was either delirious or unconscions most of the time. These facts, with many others equally strange and important, will, it is understood, house and the press and the electric soon be made public through the me-wire and the locomotive are beginning dium of those who stand responsible

New York, Sept. 27.-An Atlanta pecial in the evening papers states hat during the commemoration services at DeGive's opera house last evening, the police keeping back the crowd were assaulted by a colored man who was soon joined by others and a general riot became imminent. Twenty-five thousand people lined the streets and a panic at one time struck them. A scene of the wildest confusion ensued, which resulted in the crushing of many women and children. The policemen used their clubs dexterously and succeeded in arresting about 20 of the ringleaders. They were followed to jail by a large crowd and an attempt was made to rescue the prisoners, during which many persons were wounded. The officers finally lodged them in jail and by midnight the excitement had at Elmira, N. Y. ELMIRA, N. Y., September 25.-A ter rible hurricane struck this city this afternoon at 4:30, accompanied by a severe storm of rain. A vast amount of damage was done in about two minutes, the duration of the storm. Entire roofs with their heavy timbers were blown hundreds of feet. The Rathburn house was unroofed. The spire of Redding Methodist church was blown across the street into a yard. About two tons of brick were deposited in the organ of the First Presbyterian church. Several brick buildings had holes blown clear through them, scattering the bricks in all directions. The river bank is full of the debris of roofs blown from buildings, including chim-neys. Immense oak, elm and maple trees were snapped at the roots like pipe-stems. Almost every street is impassable from the trees blown across them. Workmen are busy with axes and teams, clearing away the ruins, and the firemen have been called out to care for endangered buildings. Mr. S. A. Manwearing was blown from his ouggy and seriously injured. The spire of a church was blown upon a house and crushed it in, fortunately injuring no one. The roof of the palace car shops was blown clear over the freight office several hundred feet. The streets were full of people, and the greatest consternation prevailed. The storm was preceded by an earthquake, and now there is a perfect calm. The rain fell so heavily that the pipes were insufficient to carry off the water, and immense damage was done to furniture by water entering the houses. The damage in this city alone will reach thousands of dollars.
