Miss Fan-ny was doubtless actuated by womanly feeling in this suggestion, but wouldn't it be rather a reflection on the widow of the President thus to admit even by implication that she could ever let the honored mother of her honored husband ever want for anything?

WHAT CONKLING MAY DO.

Since the death of President Garfield Mr. Conkling is coming to the front again as a leading figure in politics, and the question is asked what he may now do. He was apparently, after his defeat for the Senate, laid on the shelf, so to speak, and seemed to be deprived of his power, his opponents having gained a complete victory over him. With the immense odds against him, the federal patronage of the State being in the hands of his enemies, it seemed he had a herculean task before him to rally anything like a respectable opposi-tion for future contests. But he determinedly pursued his way, with the pluck characteristic of the man, and carried his fight before the primary meetings of the people after having been unhorsed at Albany. There is no doubt that he was beaten in the contest for the senatorship by federal interference, patronage and the use of money, and this fact meved him to greater efforts, to regain the prestige and the position he had lost. He hoped by exposing the corruption by which he was beaten, proof of which his friends claimed to have in their possession, to so influence popular sentiment as to secure in the next election a majority of the Legislature. The State is so districted that a Republican Legislature may be chosen though the State may give a Democratic majority of many thousands. In this effort he may now reasonably count upon the co-operation of the Arthur administration, for in all the fight Arthur's name was coupled with his when harsh criticism came in, and Arthur was severely abused for his connection with and sympathy for Conkling, so that the new President has no special reason to love Conkling's opponents, nor motive to reward them. That he will be a power with the new administration is conceded by all, and not a few believe that he will be the inspiring spirit of it the power behind the throne, that will be felt but not seen That he will not surroundings give him to cripple his. adversaries is also certain. The impression seems to be that he will make war on Lapham and Miller on the ground that their election was procured through fraud and that consequently they are not eligible to the pending on some Democratic Senator to start the investigation of the alleged corruption, when he will be forthcoming with proof to establish all the charges that have been made. Should he succeed in this and have the seats declared vacant, a new election would be held, in which Conkling would take the field for re-election to the seat which he resigned with a reasonable certainty of success. This would be his triumph and his vindication. Thus he would not only vindicate himself but humiliate the men who combined to humiliate him, and if he be not much misrepresented vengeance is sweet to him. He is a man of strong resentments and of unforgiving nature, true to his friends and unyielding to his enemies, whom he never tries to conciliate and never asks any favors of. Whether he make open war on Lapham and Miller ornot one thing is pretty certain and that is that he will never rest content till he goes back into the seat in the Senate which he vacated and of which be believes himself deprived by corrupt Typho-malarial fever, bilious colic means. Arthur is a free handed and honorable gentleman in many ways. He once drew his personal check for $30,000 to French, from reproach. He now insists that the whole salary for the first year of Garfield's term shall be paid intact to Mrs. Garfield, thus giving her a clear $50,000 in addition to the fund raised by private subscriptions. A writer in the New York Star alluding to this, says: "Instead of doing this publicly President has signified his wish quietly to one of Mrs. Garfield's most intimate friends and advisers, and nothing more with an ostentation of good feeling, the to one of Mrs. Garfield's most intimate friends and advisers, and nothing more

Goldsboro has received at the hands of the several railroads since the Vance-Hughes combination with the W. & W. Railroad and the Old Dominion steamers, a few years ago, is the proposition of Maj. J. B. Yates of the Midland North Carolina Railroad to Maj. Sol Hass, the General Preight Agent of the Associated Railways, under date of August 20th, by which he proposes to "pool the freights at Goldsboro." To pool means to form an allience by which the railroads so pooling, can reap a the railroads so pooling, can reap a rich harvest at the expense of the shippers and producers, and this system of pooling is so unjust, discriminating and hurtful to a community that but quite recently the Legislature saw fit to pass a law prescribing heavy penalties upon railways resorting to it. And yet the Midland North Carolina, in almost the very same breath, while complaining to Maj. Haas of freight discriminations against its line, proposes to resort to pooling at Goldsboro, and this at a time when our business men were resolving in public meeting to encourage and patronize the Midland and Mr. Best. We have purposely refrained from no-tiding this matter sooner, but the more we ponder over it the more unjust and untimely the proposition appears to us. We feel kindly towards Maj. Yates
