New Orleans Times.

Under the head of "Religion of the Presidents," I see it stated in a clipping in your excellent paper that Gen. Jackson was a Methodist. There are two common mistakes made in regard home in the Waxhaw settlement, South ons witness against him. Carolina, to visit him, and on her return, fifty miles from the city, took the stranger's fever and died. After this calamity young Andrew lived in the family of Maj. Robert Crawford, whose wife was Jackson's aunt. Maj. Crawford was also his guardian and the Crawfords, Jacksons and the Whites were all as brave people as ever lived and performed feats of great daring during the revolutionary war. Gett. Jacksons Carolina, to visit him, and on her rering the revolutionary war. Gen. Jackson's mother was a Miss White and all those families came together from the North of Ireland, and had in them the same stubbornness of character that pertains to a great many North Ireland people in New Orleans. I need not mention names.

Andrew Jackson began to learn the saddlery trade under Moses White, his mother's brother, but on one occasion dashed his work down and declared dashed his work down and declared that he was born for a higher destiny. (Predestination principle or doctrine animating him) and after that went to live with a Crawford, of Saulisbury, North Carolina, father of W. H. Crawford, M. C., and there studied law, and afterwards moved to Tennessee. The Childrens family, of New Orleans, are descendants of that Crawford. descendants of that Crawford.

General Jackson tried very hard to be a true Christian after he joined the church, for he despised a hypocrite, but it is probable that when his old enemies bothered him he let fly some of his old words and followed his old ways. It is very hard to get all the knots out of an oak plank. As to his being born in North Carolina, that was started after nullification and up to that "political fuss" the tradition in the Waxhaw settlement, Lancaster county, S. C., was that Jackson was born in South Carolina. Jackson, when President, sent a silver-lined shuff box in the shape of an egg to Mrs. Mary Dunlap, of Lancasterville, S. C. a daughter of Maj. Robt. Crawford and a first cousin of Jackson. President Jackson also Maj. Robt. Crawford and a first cousin of Jackson. President Jackson also wrote letters to Mrs. Dunisp and others, and he often expressed a wish to visit Lancaster, his native place.

The anuff box is now in possession of Mrs. Sims, wife of J. Marion Sims, M. D. of New York, and a grand-daughter of Mrs. Dunlap and great grand-daughter of Major Crawford. There is also another wrong impression. It is that Jackson sprung from a poor but henorable origin. This would be no discredit to him, but it is untrue. The guardian of Andrew Jackson paid him the patrimony which was would be no discredit to him, but it is untrue. The guardian of Andrew Jackson paid him the patrimony which was big money in those days, and the Jacksons, Crawfords and Whites, were the aristocracy of the Waxhaw settlement. In conclusion, it may be mentioned that your informant's mother named her son after her counsin, Andrew Jackson, and when President, General Jackson often sent him presents, and when he was living at the Hermitage, sent him a pressing invitation to make him a long visit, as he wished to see a descendant of Sarah Crawford, who was his favorite cousin, but the death of General Jackson ended the matter.

THREATENING CONKLING. Revenging Carfleld's Death-Strange Story Told by a New York Mer-

New York, Oct. 1.—An alleged plot of a madman to revange the death of President Garfield by the murder of ex-Senator Conkling has been disclosed to the police. The plotter is a person residing in Utica, where he has done business for fiften years or more. The informant is a shipping merchant who does business on the East river. His name is Jackson. He is a respectable business man and a stalwart Republican, though not in any sense a politi-cian. Mr. Jackson, whose address is withheld at his own request, received on Wednesday, September 28, a letter postmarked Utica, and mailed on the 27th. It was written by a man whom he had known and worked for fifteen years ago, and whose acquaintance he casually renewed last spring while on a visit to the interior of the State.

The message conveyed by the letter startled Mr. Jackson very much. It startled Mr. Jackson very much. It was a calm argument, apparently, to justify the assassination of ex-Senator Conkling, who "was the direct cause of President Garfield's death and of the elevation of Gen. Arthur," who, the writer put it, "was not half as big a man as Garfield." In three pages and a half of note paper he argued that Conkling had deserved death and ought to be shot; that patriotic citizens should organize to do it, and that the sentiment of the country would uphold them in doing it. The writer conveyed the further information that he was coming to New York on the occasion of ing to New York on the occasion of the State convention, on next Wednesday, and Mr. Conkling would not be admitted, be the consequence what they might. Upon reaching the end of this singular epistle, Mr. Jackson, horrified beyond measure, went to the police headquarters in search of President French, whom he knew to be a warm friend of Mr. Conkling, and in whose hands he knew the matter might be safely trusted. He reflected that some ken in, when a child, from his mother's training and prayers, for she was a woman worthy of such a son.

One of Jackson's brothers was a prisoner at Charleston, S. C., and Mrs. Jackson rode down on horse-back from her at assassination, might prove a danger-

Fifteen years ago he ran a large hotel in Utica and then Mr. Jackson managed his business for him. Lately he has been an agent for some mercantile interests. Mr. Jackson firm-ly believes him to be another Guiteau. He was unable to account for his addressing him except on the score of their old acquaintance, which, meeting by accident on a railroad train, they had renewed last spring. The Utica man had been given to various political vagaries, having, to the best of Mr. Jackson's recollection, been a delegate to the Socialistic convention at Newark four years ago. ark four years ago.

MR. MASON'S OPINION. Commissioner Mason perused the letter in silence, and, observing that it had been written by a man of education, inquired if the sender was either tion, inquired if the sender was either insane or given to drinking. Mr. Jackson had never heard that he was either. The commissioner suggested that he should write a reply to endeavor to fertet out, if possible, the real plans of the Utica man; but this Mr. Jackson refused to do, his principle desire being to get the whole matter out of his hands. At his request Commissioner Mason promised to take entire charge hands. At his request Commissioner Mason promised to take entire charge of the affair, and to consult about it with Mr. Conkling and President French, and, if necessary, with President Arthur. He was of the opinion, however, that the letter should be construed in less bloodthirsty spirit than that conceived by Mr. Jackson. Mr. Mason, when questioned about the letter by a reporter, said that he was convinced, after studying it carefully, that it should be construed into an intemperate expression of opinion that Mr. Conkling, should be hissed out of the convention. He felt quite confident that no assassination was meant or intended. He shortly after left the police headquarters with the letter, the lice headquarters with the letter, the text of which, with the name of the writer, was withheld from the reporter to President Jackson-one that he was to President Jackson—one that he was born in North Carolina and the other that he was a Methodist. I suppose that Gen. Jackson often attended that church and had a great admiration for many of the old Methodist preachers, for they were the bravest of men, and above all the clergy of that day took sin by the throat in their sermons. Jackson was a brave man and admired the same quality in others, and especially in preachers, but he was educated and carefully trained in the shorter catechism of the Presbyterian church and the five points of that faith. In old age he connected himself with the Presbyterian church at Nashville, Ten-nessee. If necessary the church records can be examined and the date can be ascertained when Andrew Jackson joined the Presbyterian church, whose creed and principles he had ta-
