It costs something to stop the wheels of business even for a single day. There are, according to the Hour, "ten million working people in the country who average at least $2 a day, which makes $20,000,000, and then there is the interruption to commerce and financial transactions and the loss of profit on labor. An unexpected stoppage of a week-day's work must cost $50,000,000."

The Rev. William Arthur, father of the President, was remarkable for his readiness in debate. Some years ago, at a meeting of the old Hudson River Baptist Association, the Rev. Mr. Walden, who had been settled in the West, but had recently taken a church at Troy, said: "I can tell the brethren if they think any sort of ministers will do for the West they are mistaken. It won't do to send second or third rate men there." Mr. Arthur was on his feet in a moment, exclaiming: "Mr. Moderator, I never knew before why Brother Walden came back."

A Curlous Law: A curious provision of the criminal discretion of the courts to impose as low a sentence as three years' imprison-ment for the offense. Under this law a miller's apprentice of Berlin has just been sentenced for cutting his wife's throat. He was out of work and money, and he and his wife formed the resolution to commit suicide together by taking poison. His wife, however, drained the cup containing the mixture alone, leaving none for him, and after awhile begged him to kill her at once, to put an end to the suffering that ensued. He complied with her request by making several gashes in her throat. This state of facts was deemed sufficient to warrant a sentence of only four years imprisonment.

The Future of Cotton. New Orleans Democrat.

There are some who hold that the late war was partly waged to dethrone cotton as a king. That monarch was certainly a powerful one in the days of slavery, and, it has never been denied, affected our politics and history and did much to frame our legislation. The war is over now; but cotton is a king again, as powerful, nay more powerful, than he was in the good old times. If the South, by virtue of the production of a crop worth $200,000,000, was then great in the councils of the nation and the markets of the world, how much more powerful must it be to-day with a crop worth $300,000,000, which it will make worth $1,000,000,000 when it shall have been obtained, as it certainly will, a monopoly of the manufacture of cotton goods.

A representative of a Northern paper, in the very heart of that district now rolling in wealth, gained by transforming the great Southern staple into cloth, the Boston Post, after a tour through only a small portion of the belt, and by no means its most promising section, is filled with wonder at what he has seen, at the facts and figures shown him, and is almost ready to bow in worship of the supposed dethroned king. There are fortunes, immense fortunes, to be made in cotton, he asserts; there is no field offering he asserts; there is no field offering such promise to the man of energy as the white fields of our Southern land; there is no such opening in the wide ex-panse of the Union as the thorough and sensible cultivation of this staple and its manufacture into cotton goods on Southern soil. The Post correspondent is as earnest on this latter point as the Democrat. He scouts the weak suggestions of some would-be political economists that the Southern people are not adapted to factory work; and cites one irrefutable, overwhelming argument in favor of Southern cotton miles the are favor of Southern cotton mills, the argument of profit, that the 250 cotton factories south of the Potomac yield average dividends of 221/2 per cent. A Massachusetts man himself, he confesses that the glory of his own State, that which makes its rocks richer than the best quartz of Nevada's bonanza, pire is thinly settled, while only the lands lying along the rivers are densely populated. Great uncertainty exists as to the total population; it is thought by quickly will be the Atlanta Exposition. some to be about 100,000,000, by others It must be conceded that the Southern

There is no need for seeking explanations for this, they are so numerous; the carelessness of the negro, the interruptions of the war, the cheapness of lands-all these have made cotton planting loose, careless and improvi-dent. While the West has a hundred different cultivators, mowers and harvesters to aid its farmers, so that on the great wheat farms, like that of the Dalrymples in Minnessota, two-thirds of the work is done by steam, cotton is cultivated in the most simple manner, with muscle and hoe and plow, showing but little improvement since the days of Abraham, if we except only the cotton gin.

He Loved His Birdie.

Chicago Tribune. "Do you love your Birdie as much now as you did last Thursday?" It was a beautiful girl who spoke these words, as she leaned her head trustingly on the shoulder of a young man whose strong right arm encircled her corset.

"Your heart must tell you that I do, my sweet," he murmured, folding her closely to his breast. thronged oyster saloons. It was now July. The snow had given way to the violet and the cyster to the ice cream.

But Juliet's love never wavered

She had for George a calm but intense affection that buried all else in its wondrous depths. "A true woman never loves but once, and you are my idol," she had said to him one night after he had told her that her bustle was comingloose. From that moment each understood the other perfectly.

"But, Georgie, dear," said the girl again, "if you love me with a really and truly love, kiss me again."

A shudder passed over the young man's frame, and he changed the subject of conversation. But the girl would not listen. "You must kiss me," she said, "or you do not love me."

Turning ghastly pale in the dim half light of the turn-down gas, he averted his head and said in a low, choked voice: "I cannot kiss you."

voice: "I cannot kiss you."
"Cannot!" shrieked the girl in an agony of grief, clinging to him with the energy of despair, while a deathly pallor overspread her cheek. "Tell me, George, tell me truly, what has come
