Hot! it was seven times hotter than any place I ever the steam of at Sunday school. I heard the sald bricks of one round each. All this read of at Sunday school. I begged the salamander to take me out. I told him was done enough for the most æsthetic cannibals he was cooking me for. At length, after what appeared to me to be an age, he moved into another room, so much hotter than the one I had left that the air from the latter was chilly as he closed the door. I was par-boiled already, and this was evidently the baking oven, and being too weak to get out, I just allowed myself to be rolled onto the marble table, where I supposed I was to be carved finally. But I did not think I was to be day?

to a Constitution reporter: "I see to-day at the exposition and in attendance on the cotton planters association, one of the members of the old North State, Captain Thigpen, a Southern farmer, that every Southern man should be proud of. When I say self-sustaining, I mean it. Captain Thigpen commenced after the war on a desolate, poor farm, without money, without stock or without anything. Now he has one of the largest and most complete farms in the State, and on it he makes from 600 to 800 bales of cotton per year, all the corn, fodder, oats, wheat and pork to supply his entire place and always a surplus to sell his neighbors, who plant all cotton. You will find the captain here as you find him and his family any where else, neatly dressed in clothes that are spun, wove and made at home. He even raises his own sheep, wool, etc. He also raises beef cattle for market, has flour to sell, which is almost an unheard of thing in a cotton country, he also raises his own mules and horses, not only enough for his farm but often has a surplus to sell. When our cotton farms can get in such a healthy condition all through the South, we will have the grandest country on earth. I am told that the captain makes generally a bale of cotton to the acre. He is a plain, modest, unpretentious South-ern gentleman, but one of the best men

PREMATURE LOSS OF THE HAIR May be entirely prevented by the use of BUR-NETT'S COCOAINE. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of the human hair. It softens the hair when harsh and dry. It soothes the irritated scalp. It affords the richest lustre. It prevents the hair from falling off. It promotes its healthy, vigorous growth. It is not greasy nor sticky. It leaves no disagreeable odor. It kills dandruff.
