Miss Rebecca Bates died at Scituate, Mass., Wednesday, aged 88 years. Miss Bates and her cousin Abbie were the heroines of the "scare" in 1812, when the two girls, hidden behind rocks on the beach, with fife and drum sounded the roll-call and put to flight several boatloads of troops from a British man-of-war, who were about to make a landing. ### Political Affairs South.

Wash. Cor. Philadelphia Times. Congressmen are just now actively discussing the condition of political affairs in the South. There seems to be a general impression among members of both parties that a general break-up in the solid Democratic South is iminent. This is not the expression of a few, but a belief that obtains among quite a number of leading Democrats of both North and South. The curious part of the whole thing is that Southern Democrats are inclined to welcome such dis-integration, while Northern members of the party generally deplore it. In a party of five Democratic Southern and two Northern men to-day every South-ern man declared it his opinion that the success of the national Democratic party depended upon breaking the Southern machine, and while some local political loss might be felt it would insure to the ultimate benefit of the national organization and commercial prosperity of the South. The two Northern Democrats dissented. The crowd of representative Southern people about the hotels is a novelty not experienced since the war, and the discussion of Southern interests is a common topic.

Singular and Fatal Accident.

BLOWING GREEN, VA., Dec. 13.—A most distressing accident occurred several miles from this place last Friday. Mr. Wm. Wright, a young man who had not been married more than six or eight months, was chopping in the woods. About the middle of the day his wife came to bring him a lunch. He had just cut down a large tree which had lodged against another, and called to his wife to run, as it was coming to the ground, but the unfortunate woman ran directly in the way of the ing to the ground, but the unfortunate woman ran directly in the way of the tree, and it fell upon her, pinning her to the ground. She was not killed, but lay under the tree terribly crushed, but lay under the tree terribly crushed, but conscious, and shricking with pain, sonscious, and shricking with pain, while her husband, alone and unassisted, set to work with all the energy of despair to cut the tree, two feet in diameter, in two. After what seemed to the couple an age, Mr. Wright severed the trunk of the tree and drew out his mangled, fainting wife. He then was compelled to leave her alone in the woods another long hour while he went for assistance to get her home, but she was almost gone when he returned, and died that night of her injuries.

The Railroad Celebration at Edenten.

Last Tuesday was a grand affair. A large party from Norfolk went to Edenton and were received by Mayor Hathaway, of the latter place, in a stirring speech, to which Mr. Phillips, president of the railroad syndicate, responded. Major John Gatling, of Raleigh, made an excellent speech. Among other speakers were Colonel L. D. Starke, of Norfolk, and Colonel R. B. Creecy, of the Elizabeth City Economist.
