THE INDUSTRIAL SOUTH.

AS SEEN AT THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION. Its influences as an incentive to Modern Southern Progress--The Old South as Contrasted with the New Era and the Future Foreshadowed.

THE Great Southern International Cotton Exposition, including as it does an Industrial Exhibition, now being held at Atlanta, Georgia, the "Gate City" of the South, will close on the 31st day of December; but its influences are calculated to be as lasting in their effects upon the people of the South, as any event which has occurred in the present century, if indeed we except the great civil war of 1861-65.

Much credit may be ascribed to Mr. H. I. Kimball and the gentlemen associated with him as members of the executive committee, who undertook the movement, and who, by all odds, were foremost in bringing the enterprise up to the plane of a grand and brilliant success; but the fact should not be forgotten that unaided by the masses of the people, North and South, their efforts must have proven abortive.

Southern people, for many decades, have busied themselves in studying stale platitudes in regard to the theory of government, while they slept on their possession of expansive and inexhaustible store-houses of material wealth, such as are now on exhibition at Atlanta.

In the course of a few years, or at least in a generation or two, N. feels cramped, because he cannot profitably employ all his slaves on his present allotment of land, and he goes successively to g, h, i, o, t, s, r, and m, who sell him their landed property, gather up their household gods and set out for the further West.

The war was a great civilizer, as well as a great leveler. It proved men. The dishonest man had a chance to steal, or to pilfer from his neighbor in every shade of peccation; while the honest man, whom Pope has designated as "the noblest work of God," shone out in a bright, effulgent character.

In succeeding years he became the postmaster, the justice of the peace, the proprietor of the village store, and he generally found his way to the State Legislature. Federal legislation in those days rarely bothered the mind or the interest of those people of the States who were carving out the destiny of a great and powerful nation, from the wilderness, and beyond the confines of civilization; so that practically our "leading man" became the maker of the laws, and at his home he was the expounder and the executive of those laws as well.

Table with 5 columns (a-e) and 5 rows (f-v) containing letters.

We will say that this plat represents 25 parcels of land granted by the State, and located by N. for a colony. His superior ability, his decided force of character, has already made him a leader in his selection to locate the colony.

The science of political economy, as applied to the increase of the wealth of nations, teaches that the real profit on capital is about 3 per cent. net, not more. The sources of wealth are three: the agricultural, or the products of the soil; the mechanical, the result of the labors of our work-shops, foundries, &c.; and the mineral, gold, silver, copper, iron, &c.

Capital is accumulated labor, and wealth is capital derived from one of these sources; therefore, if our "leading man" makes any profit over and above the 3 per cent., the increase must come from some man who loses, and the loser must pay the penalty--if we may so express it--by becoming poorer and poorer; and it is in this manner that we account for the social status of the two classes.
