The wisdom of placing the unfinished road in the hands of a party who were not only willing but able to carry out the Best contract with the State, is now made manifest, and those who have differed with THE OR-SERVER in this particular, must now see that the great object of completing the national capital, and never was this great public work, without further cost to the State, was wise, practical and bears good fruit, if we admit that the State herself was unwilling to carry er as corrupt and villainous, and out the project to its consummation.

But while this is so, the announcement that the work has been done-that North Carolina has at last been wedded to Tennessee by this railroad marriagecomes to-day in a manner that is peculiarly gratifying to THE OBSERVER, because it gives us the opportunity to say "we told you so."

GUITEAU CONVICTED.

The remarkable trial of Guiteau closed yesterday with his conviction, and sets at rest all doubts and discussion the opinion that it would be a "hung" jury, thinking they detected indications in the actions of one of the jurors which gave foundation for that opinion. But from the popular demonstrations, the notes, postal cards, and sundry messages sent to Guiteau, his counsel, and the judge, and the positively phrased epistles from numbers of "Avengers," it would require a little more than ordinary pluck for a juror to go into that room and come out with any other verdict than that of guilty. We do not mean to charge that these threats, etc., did influence the jury in rendering a verdict of guilty, but it would be very singular if it did not. As the public were more or less divided in opinion as to the assassin's sanity, it is more than likely that there would have been a difference of opinion among the jury, and we think at one time there was, until Guiteau in his egotistic desire to appear smart spoiled his plea of insanity by appearing too smart. Had he put in his plea of inspiration, shut his mouth and trusted to his counsel he would have stood a much better show, but his towering egotism lost him whatever of sympathy he hoped for, and dishe was an irresponsible imbecile. While his counsel represented him as insane, he repudiated the alleged insanity, and boldly declared that he would rather be hanged as a sane man than acquitted as insane. He claimed divine inspiration as the justification of the act, a claim which, of course, could have no weight in law, unless sustained. by insanity, that would lead to the belief that he thought himself inspired But the inspiration theory was not in keeping with his subsequent actions, and consequently had no influence whatever in the case.

proved the theory of his counsel that

It was evident as the trial progressed that his counsel and himself had abandoned the hope of acquittal, which was forcibly shown in Mr. Scoville's argument before the jury when he turned out of his way and made an onslaught eulogizing the late Senator Matt Caron Arthur, Conkling and Grant, which | penter. he would not have done did he not regard his case as desperate, and the prosecution evidently thought so, too, when they waived their objection and let Guiteau read his speech to the jury.

There will probably be a move for a new trial, as a matter of form, if nothing else, but there is no probability of that being granted, so that as far as the courts go Guiteau's case has in all likelihood been settled.

Notwithstanding the verdict, however, there is no small number of people who believe him insane, insane at the time he pulled the fatal trigger and insane now. When the rope ends his existence it will send into eternity one of the strangest and most remarkable men that ever figured before the public in this or any other country.

EXTRAORDINARY LIBERALITY. Senator Logan's bill to increase the annual pension allowed to Mrs. Lincoln from $3,000 to $5,000 a year, and give her $15,000 arrears, has passed the Senate and will probably pass the House. Under the circumstances it is proper that Mrs. Lincoln should receive a pension, and she has for years received her $3,000 regularly. She has no one to provide for but herself and it would seem that she ought to be able to live comfortably on $3,000 a year, but Mr. Logan thinks she ought to have $5,000, and $15,000 thrown in for good measure. If Mr. Logan had to do the eight-inch bowie-knife and tossed it paying he would probably conclude that she could get along on considerably less, but as he does not furnish the wherewith, and the people do, he can afford to be liberal. There is a liberal member of Congress, too, from one of the Western ought to have a pension of about $5,000. notwithstanding the princely sum donated to her by the American people. If there was need of this, or if it were necessary to show the esteem of the people for either of the widows of the dead Presidents, there might be no objection to it, but when it is inspired by the wish to gain a little cheap notoriety by appearing liberal with the people's money, and putting that money into A telegram from Salisbury late last the pockets of people who are not in need of it we think there is good ground

The Dead Senator. Washington, Jan. 25.—House.—On motion of Reed, of Maine, the Senate bill permitting Associate Justice Ward Hunt, of the United States Supreme Court to retire, was taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration. Reed explained the provisions of the bill and then yielded the floor to Townshend, of Illinois, who opposed it. First, because it would set a dangerous precedent; second, because he regarded t as a reflection upon a high tribunal to presume that one of its members would for pecuniary consideration be induced to do what it was his duty to the people to do. House, of Tennessee, also opposed the bill. Justice Hunt had been disabled for three years and during that time had drawn $30,000 for which he had rendered no equivalent.

The debate was continued by a dozen members about equally divided. The bill then passed. Yeas, 137; nays, 89. A majority of the Republicans voted in the affirmative, and the body of the Democrats in the negative. A number of executive communications were read and referred, among them a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting an estimate of appropriations required by the various departments to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and prior years, amounting to $23,159,690. At 2 o'clock all business was suspended and the House proceeded to pay its
