TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1882. REACHING SOUTHWARD.

It has been evident ever since the administration under Garfield lent itself to the coalition with Mahone, of Virginia, that it was the policy of the Republican party to divide the Democratic party in such of the Southern States as were open to overtures, and thus gain by bargain what it could not achieve by the force of its own numbers. The programme as far as Virginia was concerned worked pretty well, and facts soon became apparent that a similar movement was on foot in some of the other States, and the socalled independent movement was actually begun but has thus far made but a very sickly progress.

In Georgia it has got along so far as to secure the establishment of an organ at Atlanta, and the holding of a conference of the leaders who enunciated a platform, which platform, however, does not yet show any startling follow-

In this State it got along so far as to receive an invitation from the colored them, and be of their household. We presume when the Republican executive committee meets at Raleigh, which it will shortly, this invitation will be supplemented by another.

The game that was started under Mr. Garfield's administration has been continued by his successor in a quiet way, for he recognizes the necessity of trying to secure some Southern States to offset those that may be lost, or doubtful, in the North, from the contentions between the two Republican factions, or from the defection of the Pacific States in consequence of the dissatisfaction over the Chinese question. Just | the company to carry his freight at the at this juncture the condition of affairs lowest rates, or might pay the rate dein South Carolina, arising from the prosecution of the citizens of that State charged with violation of the election laws, gives the Washington only denies to railroads as common car-Republican an opportunity to express its views at some length in the following wooing strain:

negro suffrage is not necessary to white | pronounces the contract between a rail- | twenty million dollars, the same to be rule. We believe that the colored lead- road company and a shipper not binders of South Carolina would at any ing and final upon the latter in case of time lend their aid to a good under-standing with the whites. They cannot means of transportation, the shipper is annually in consideration of the relinjoin a political cry of "Down with the helpless and not a free agent in connegro!" and that is all there is of Democracy. But they will forget all past wrongs and follow the lead of the held differently. Judge Baxter used white men of South Carolina who will the following language: leave the Democratic party to rot with the dead past which it represents and to exchange Democratic minority rule for independent majority rule? Would not M. C. Butler reflect more credit on the honored name he bears if, instead of representing only an unscrupulous faction, usurping the power it cannot rightfully command by votes, he would bravely lead South Carolina out of her present dishonorable dilemma and come back to the Senate bearing the commission of a majority, led by Democrats who had destroyed their party to pre-serve the principles on which it was founded? Would this not be better politics than persistence in the present system? Has South Carolina any great interest in making national politics for Northern Democrats?

'What better scheme for home rule can there be than a ready acquiescence of the masses of the legal black voters in the leadership of those who are recognized as best acquainted with public affairs? This would involve an oblivion of old and bitter antagonisms, the negroes have the wisdom and generosity to accept. It only means equality of legal rights. What a day it would be for South Carolina if enough whites would take the lead and bring it about. They would by such a course not only secure good government in South Carolina, but they would become more important factors in national affairs than they can ever be as mere obstruction-

Taken in connection with the fact that the Republican is regarded as the organ of the administration this is significant, and is a feeler thrown out, not only to South Carolina, but to any other Southern State which may be open to negotiations. This is simply a feeler, but it will be followed up if it takes, and there be any encouragement for further effort and direct proceedings.

The burial of Jesse James, the brigand, in Missouri, was a queer jumble of religion and ruffianism. There were friends of the deceased outlaw, preached a funeral sermon for the conden taking off of the bold highwayman. Accordingly, he emptied a box of rat poison into the family coffee pot, just

It is lawful to compel laborers to yote for an employer's interest in Ohio, but not in South Carolina. The Ohio men happen to be white, which makes all the difference in the world to great moral idea folks.

It is said that James Gordon Bennett's steam yacht, the Namauna, now about completed, will be the most elegant vessel afloat. Namauna means the harem. Mr. Bennett is a haremscarem sort of a chap.

The Chicago Tribune pronounces the criminal laws of Illinois, as administered-or rather not administered-a farce. This remark would apply to other States as well as Illinois.

It is hard to tell what a tangled shape the politics of this country is going to take in the near future. We have the consolation of knowing that the prospects for a good fruit crop are jam up.

An Important Decision on Equal Rates.

The decision of Judge Baxter, ren-dered recently in the United States Circuit court in Ohio, in a suit brought against the Pennsylvania Railroad on account of a discrimination in freight charges on coal between Salineville Home, for payment of interest on the and Cleveland, will prove of considerable interest both to railroads and to their customers. The charges between the points named were graded according to the amount shipped, the large shippers obtaining lower rates than small ones The court held this to be illegal. It held, also, that a shipper discriminated against might either compel manded by the railroad company and afterward recover by suit the difference between this and the proper rate. This decision goes unusually far. It not riers the right to make a difference in price in favor of large quantities of freight, the right by which private cor-"We repeat that the suppression of | for large sales than small ones, but it | bands of Indians. whomsoever they chose." The Judge's decision will doubtless be appealed from, and on the appeal receive the full consideration to which the importance of the interests involved entitles it. What is equality of rates? Is it to be literally construed as in Judge Baxter's decision, or is it subject to certain limitations and refinements?

On a tract of some fifty acres, cut into plats of four acres, with a central drain or ditch eight feet deep and six feet wide, connected with drains surrounding each of the four acre plats, were raised corn, millet, garden vegetables and fruits. Of corn fifty bushels to the acre were raised, and of millet five tons. Sweet potatoes weighing five pounds each were produced, and turnips, cabbage, beets and other vegetables in proportion, all without manure or special cultivation. The correspondent states that in a young orchard of apple, pear and peach trees he saw an apple tree of six years growth, whose trunk was as large as a man's leg, while one of the trophies is a pear weighing eighteen ounces, the product of a tree only five years from the seeding. Strawberries and small fruits, ncluding grapes, flourish luxuriantly.

The White Woods of the South.

The white woods of the South constitute an important factor in the resources of the southern States. Prior to the war these woods were scarcely thought of beyond the confines of the plantation to which they belong and for the keeping up of which only they were caelled into use, and as often for fire-wood as for mechanical purposes. in many instances whole forests of tnese woods were cut down and burned to make room for planting. During commercial exchanges of New Orleans those times the hickory and correspon-ding white woods of the hills of New England, together with those of the Genesee Valley of Western New York, were celebrated not only for their strength and elasticity, but for being the best non-resinous to be had in North America. But these were not destined always either to excel or last. As they began to be exhausted, the western forests were opened up, and the white woods of the creek and river bottoms of that vast region were put under contribution. Later on the cause that had been so long overshadowing many of the resources of the South was removed. As this passed away, the quickened enterprise that followed soon discerned that thesouthern States abounded not only in in the various kinds of white and colored woods, but that they were of the best quality. These woods include the hickory, the oaks, ash, maple, poplar. cy-press, persimmon, boxwood, dogwood, apple, currant, beech, holly, cherry, walnut, etc.; and we may add the (white wood) gum or cork-trees-that is, the "tupler" the "black" and the "sweet" gum-trees. The two first-named produces berries, but are free from gum or resin: the latter bears seedless burs, and of its sap yields an abundance of "sweet gum" while standing, but when seasoned is free from gum.

Of these, the hickory, for general mechanical purposes, excels, though each of the others has its special value and adaption. The persimmon, for instance, excels for shuttles; the apple for plow stocks: This must be a mistake-Ed OBSERVER.] the maple for rollers and stamps; the box or dogwood for engraving, for signs, or croquet balls; the "tupler" gum and "black" gum (so called because of its black berry and dark colored bark) or cork, for trays and other wooden vessels. The cherry, the cypress, the poplar, the walnut, the holly and others, each has its specialities. The ash and the various oaks all have their peculiar uses. The ash is particularly useful for the handles of spades, pitchforks, hoes, rakes, and other light handles, and also for such things as harvest cradles. But none of these can approach hickory for general utility. While it is sufficiently light, it is nearly as strong as, and more elastic than steel. It can never be excelled for spokes, cogs, rollers, axe, pick and ham- | Four per cents,..... mer handles, and thousands of other

This hickory grows abundantly very nearly all over the southern States. And it is now generally conceded that the soil and climate of the South, taken generally, produce the strongest and most elastic hickory known to the mechanical arts. And as the hills of New England and the valley of Western New York are gradually depleted, the South is presenting new flields of a superior bickory that will find no difficulty in competing with the growths of the river bottoms of the West. In the South are to be found the creek-bottom and the hammock and highland hickories. The two latter are much more abundant than the former, and much stronger and more elastic. It is in these last named hickories that the South excels, the supply being so great that we may hope to meet all demands for years to come.
