Logrolling in the House-Clubbing to Get Bills Through---Judge Settle Looking After the Judgeship on the Chart of Claims Cooper's Chammission Signed Personal Notes and Other Items of Interest.

WASHINGTON, May 3. Many people felt called upon to laugh at Commissioner of Agriculture, LeDuc, and to make light of his hobby, which was too culture, but recent developments show that perhaps I cling may have an opportunity to light best by laughing "last," for the experiments which he inaugurated in the south, in the culture of teach by the particular and the south in the culture of teach by the south in the south in the culture of teach by the south in the culture of teach by the south in of tea, have, in some degree at least proved a success. Information received here from the experimental farm near Georgetown, S. C., shows that the ex-periments there have been eminently successful and that the possibility of the successful growing and carrier of tea in the South need scarcely be leager considered an experiment. The tea crop on this farm has recently been gathered and "cured" after the approved Chinese and Japanese fashion, and the result is a tea in every way meeting the requirements of public taste and habits, and in appearance, quality and flavor, ranking higher than the average tea imported into this country from China, Japan and India.

From a gentleman who visited Georgetows to witness and segist in the

Georgetown to witness and assist in the harvesting and curing of the tea crop at the Forster farm near that place, I gather the following details of that interesting event: Of the many persons in the South, to whom the tea plants had been distributed by Commissioner LeDuc, none had cared for them more intelligently than Mrs. Forster, the owner of the farm in question. She had had the young plants carefully and intelligently cultivated and cared for and the time for gathering found them in excellent condition, except that the unusually cool weather had caused some of the lower leaves of the plants to become too tough. On the day fixed for the harvesting and curing of the experimental crop the weather was bad for outdoor curing as had been intend-Georgetown to witness and assist in the for outdoor curing as had been intended, and the result was that it became necessary to "cure" the tea after it had been gathered, by artificial treatment instead of the rays of the sun, yet even this did not prevent a most gratifying success. The work was performed under the direction of a gentleman from Baltimore who has taken much interest in tea culture, and has given much time and attention to the methods of cultivating and curing tea in the countries where it is grown. The tea after being gathered was "wilted" in an oven and then placed on a pine table and rolled with the hand into rolls similar to those seen in "Young Hyson" and "Gunpowder" and the plainer but more wholesome "Unacloyed Issues". "Gunpowder" and the plainer but more wholesome "Uncolored Japan." The process of rolling was found to be remarkably easy and one which could readily be performed by machinery. Then a part of the tea thus prepared was made up into large loaves and left to "sweat" according to the system by which the "English Breakfast" tea is prepared. The remainder was then put through the "firing process, the most delicate and difficult part of the work of curing after the tea is grown.

This process, which is similar in manner and in effect to the roasting of coffee, was successfully accomplished, and the result was a fine crisp, fresh, finely flavored tea, better in quality than the average tea imported into this country.

After the loaves or balls of tea which had been set aside to sweat in order to make "English Breakfast" of it had arrived at the proper stage they were broken open and the tea in them, which had attained a very satisfactory color and condition, was also "fired" with remarkable success and the tea pronounced equal to the other varieties, made the experiment a wonderful success.

Whether the growing of tea in this country will, under the very low prices which competition in Japan, India and hina have produced, become at present a profitable industry, is as yet difficult to say. The possibility of its being successfully and easily produced and cured, is however demonstrated. It is even shown that the process is so simple that every family in the South possessed of a small plot of ground eligibly situated, may grow its own tea, and it is not improbable that, with a moderate stessed of a small plot of ground eligibly situated, may grow its own tea, and it is not improbable that, with a moderate protection, such as is afforded most of the industries of the country, the culture of tea at the South may become an important and successful work.

The season has arrived when Congress is likely to be seen at its worst. Having log-rolled bills through the committees, members are now at work log-rolling them through the House By log-rolling is meant a banding to gether of members to push bills through the House under a supposition of the rules and thereby cutting off extended debate.
