Several cases of small-pox have caused some alarm in Lynchburg, Va. The disease is confined to individuals of the colored population. James Vick, the well known seeds-man of Rochester, N. Y., died Tuesday aged 64 years. The New York board of aldermen esterday adopted an ordinance forbidding the beating of drums or blowing of horns in the city by itinerant shows to attract attention, and the playing of organs before 9 a. m., or after 9 p. m. In the British House of Commons Tuesday the conservative party irritated Mr. Gladstone by charging that the Senator Bayard on the Decline of Our Merchant Marine.

Mr. Bayard made an admirable speech on the decline of the merchant marine of the United States at the anniversary dinner of the New York chamber of commerce on Tuesday. He explained the causes of its decay, and spoke at large on the importance of extending it by such wise legislation as would restore to us activity in ship-building under the new conditions that have substituted iron for wood. He is con-vinced that our shipbuilders would equal those of Great Britain if they were not, by unwise laws, deprived of the advantages possessed by their rivals. The latter obtain all the materials entering into shipbuilding duty free, and he holds that it is obviously reasonable and just that the American shipbuilder should be put upon the same footing. He would not, however, limit this exemption from taxation of raw materials to the shipbuilder only. He favors a removal of obstructive and prohibitory duties upon raw materials generally, so as to enable our manufacturers to reach the world's markets unweighted by taxes from which their rivals are exempt. If all raw materials were put on the free list there would be no necessity for discriminating in this particular in favor of the shipbuilder. The need for American ships is largely dependent upon our ability to compete in the markets of the world with the manufacirres of other nations, and we cannot do this until we are placed in a position to exchange our manufactures for their raw products, whereby we should furnish them a market for the materials that enter into manu-ractured goods, and by our get-ting those materials duty free we would be able in return to cheapen the cost of our manufactured products. Until we can re-establish our old com-merce with foreign, ports the demand for American ships will be restricted pretty much to the carriage to Europe of our staple agricultural and dairy products; our provisions and petroleum, and for the transportation of these the competition of foreign lines is so great that profits have been reduced to a minimum. To help the American shipowner to maintain himself against competition, Mr. Bayard would repeal all laws which impose vexatious and burdensome fees upon the entry and documentation of ships. But, as he points out, to run a ship profitably and enable it to carry freight reasonably, it must be full both ways; and herein lies our present difficulty. Even if we could get an outward-bound cargo, where except in Europe and in the face of strenuous competition, could we get a return cargo so long as our tariff prevents up from exchanging with nonvents us from exchanging with nonmanufacturing nations their raw mate-cessions would be beneficial alike to our commerce and our shipbuilding inrial for our manufactured commodities?

Mr. Bayard sets himself firmly against the idea of belstering up shipbuilding by means of subsidies. The point he makes is that if American shipbuilders are given the same chance as British shipbuilders, they will be able to equal and in time surpass them in the construction of iron or steel merchant ships, as in the old days of shipbuilding they surpassed them in the construc-tion of wooden ships. The policy he suggests is a good one, and although he Illusions. The United States consul at Amsterdam writes to the State Department that his efforts to break up the longcontinued practice of fraud by certain parties upon hundreds of American citizens, with whom they had succeeded in creating a belief that they were entitled to and could secure, under certain contingencies, vast fortunes held in Holland, being the proceeds of the estates of their ancestors, seem at last to give promise of entire success, Certain organizations at home and their agents abroad, who by willful misrepresentations have kept this matter alive for so many years, appear now to find doing so less productive than formerly, as their dupes have been enlightened on the subject and their delusions dispelled. It is to be hoped that such illusions may be entirely dispelled, and that no American-citizens will in future waste time or money in anticipations of recovering any old Dutch claims, concerning which they have already allowed themselves to be imposed upon too long.

> The Presbyterian General Assembly. Charleston News and Courier.

During this week and the next, four General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church of this country will be in session, representing an aggregate of 900,186 members, 10,939 churches and 8,237 ministers. Of this number the Northern Presbyterian Church, which meets at Springfield, Illinois, in the State-house, and is formally welcomed by the State authorities, has 581,401 members, 5,598 churches, 5,086 ministers; the Southern Presbyterian Church representen in the General Assembly at Atlanta, Ga., has 121,915 members. 1,957 churches, 1,061 ministers; the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, convened at Huntsville, Ala., furnishes 113,933 members, 2,570 churches, 1,386 ministers; and the United Presbyterian Church, whose Assembly will be held at Monmouth, Illinois, next week, consists of 82,937 members, 814 churches, 704 ministers. These bodies are the courts of final appeal in the church which they represent-the supreme judicatures, where the decisions of Church Sessions, Preshyteries and Synods may be carried for review and authoritative decision, after having passed in turn through these subordinate courts. The General Assembly has full legislative authority in the church, subject only to the revealed will of God. The ratio of representation is numerical, and the basis of enumeration is the number of ministers in each Presbytery, although the clerical and lay elements are equally represented in the General Assembly. byteries having not more than send one commissioner from the ministry and one from the eldership of the church. The number of commissioners from a Presbytery increases with the number of ministers beyond 24. Each Presbytery defrays the expenses of its own commissioners, who are required to give formal report as to the faithful discharge of their duties. Upon the floor of the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church some of the most eminent men of the country, jurists, statesmen and scholars, are annually to be heard, giving the counsel of their practical wisdom to the deter-mination of points of doctrinal statement and the decision of questions of ecclesiastical law. The Southern General Assembly, which convenes this week at Atlanta, Ga., was separated from its sisters of the North by the war. In full sympathy with what had been known as the "Old School Presbyterianism," which had sternly eschewed all political or sectional questions up to the war, when that or anization so far violated its conservative traditions as to make bitter deliverances upon the matters about which the country was divided, there was seemingly no alternative for the Southern church but separation and independent existence. Every consideration of principle and self-respect demanded that they should withdraw from a relation in which they were regarded as sinful and criminal. the various Presbyteries in the then Confederate States, organized at Augusta, Ga., "The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America," with a constituency of 811 ministers and licentiates, and

Judge Davis' Method. Indianapolis Sentinel

David Davis weighs 400 pounds. He is a big eater. His enjoyments are never larger than when equipped for dinner, and when the pangs of hunger lay hold upon him, and the Senate won't adjourn, David Davis becomes restless and unamiable. It is said that quite recently the session of the Senate was protracted until the dinner hour of D. Davis had come and passed. As usual D. D. was restive. He wanted some one of the Senators to move an adjournment. It was not done. Another Senator arose to make a prosy speech Then, says report, D. Davis "grasped the opportunity by the forelock," and exclaimed: "There being no further business before the Senate, a motion to adjourn is in order; the Senater from — has the floor, and moves to adjourn.
