No Whiskey!

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is one of the very few tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whiskey, thus becoming a fruitful source of intemperance by promoting a desire for rum.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is guaranteed to be a non-intoxicating stimulant, and it will, in nearly every case, take the place of all liquor, and at the same time absolutely kill the desire for whiskey and other intoxicating beverages.

Rev. G. W. Rice, editor of the American Christian Review, says of Brown's Iron Bitters:

Cin., O., Nov. 16, 1881. Gents—The foolish wasting of vital force in business, pleasure, and vicious indulgence of our people, makes your preparation a necessity; and if applied, will save hundreds who resort to saloons for temporary recuperation.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS has been thoroughly tested for dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, weakness, debility, overwork, rheumatism, neuralgia, consumption, liver complaints, kidney troubles, &c., and it never fails to render speedy and permanent relief.

The commencement at Biddle Institute, near this city, opens next Wednesday.

Too late to go up in the stand pipe now, as of most the scaffolding has been taken out.

Poplar Tent, Cabarrus county, moved over to Charlotte yesterday to do its trading. Ten or fifteen of the citizens of that township were going the rounds of our mercantile houses.

The reapers are busy gathering the golden grain in the fields surrounding the city, and throughout the country. Many fields have already been cut and the sheaves stacked.

The city school commissioners held a meeting yesterday afternoon, but not getting through with any business until night caught them, adjourned over to this evening, when the meeting will be continued.

Yesterday morning the last brick on the new depot of the Carolina Central Railroad, was laid. The building is two stories high in front, the offices being on the second floor, all the space below being open for storage. The ware-room is 104x40 feet.

The streets were crowded yesterday with wagons loaded with wood, and the drivers had the hardest sort of work to dispose of it. A three horse load of good seasoned cord wood sells at 60 cents, and the wood men appear to be happy to get that much.

The news from our Charlotte party who are wading the mountain streams in search of the trout, is to the effect that they are having a tremendous time and meeting with fine success in angling. Brem and Watts are the champions so far.

The Richmond & Danville noon train coming south, has got on to the old winter schedule, during the past few days, and its arrival may be looked for anywhere between 1 and 3 o'clock. Delayed connections north is the trouble.

It is said that the Republicans the Simon-pure-dyed-in-the-wool rads will have another convention in the court house next Monday, the object being to counter balance the effect of the liberal convention of Wednesday last. The indications point to a lively time.

An engine and three coaches carried the First Presbyterian Sunday school and friends, yesterday, to a point about five miles down the Carolina Central, where a most delightful day was spent. The train returned to the city with its happy load about five o'clock in the afternoon.

Beaten by a Colored Woman. Last Thursday evening, Leno Wills, a white man, went to the house of Sally Kennedy, colored, and began to give her "some of his jaw," as she expressed it. She took as much of it as she could, until finally, becoming greatly exasperated she fell upon him and almost slew him.

As soon as the man could get out of her clutches he fled and left her to fix up the matter with the mayor, which she did yesterday morning by paying a fine of $25.00 and costs. The man has not been captured, but the first time his nose turns a street corner in this city he will be swooped upon.

Hornet Company, No. 1. At a regular meeting of the Hornet Steam Fire Engine and Hose Company, No. 1, held last night, the following new members were added to their roll: E. C. Worthen, H. C. Morrow, W. M. Boyd, W. Bernstein and C. Wilson, Jr. With this addition the Hornet Company has 57 active members.

A resolution was unanimously adopted thanking those who kindly contributed eatables to the banquet for our visiting firemen on the night of May 20th; and a special vote of thanks was passed to Miss Gussie Boyd for floral offerings.

Neighborhood Notes. Cabarrus is preparing for the opening of the campaign. Democratic primary meetings are to be held on the 10th inst, and the county convention to elect delegates to the district convention meets on the 24th inst., in Concord.

Our weekly exchanges have dropped the big strawberry agitation and are now running on the cereal samples. Straw's six feet, heads six inches and forty-two grains to the head, is the kind of wheat the Cabarrus farmers have been waiting for the Concord editors.

The Salisbury Watchman has been getting a taste of Nihilism and can now sympathize more fully with the old Ozar who lives across the water. Last Tuesday night some reckless person put a charge of dynamite in an old barrel, placed it near the Watchman office and fired it. It shook up things, but damaged the surrounding property only slightly.

Living has got to be exceedingly high in Monroe, and the Express says that chickens and eggs can hardly be got for love or money.

Bob Crawford, a barber in Monroe, was tearing up his house in search of rats when he came across a lot of old Confederate shams, about fifty pair, concealed between the weather boarding and ceiling. He didn't trouble himself about trying to solve the mystery, but began to dispose of the shoes at 25 cents per pair.

HOTEL BEATS.

The Man with the India Rubber Valise.—The Long Duster Dodge—A Charlotte Hotel brought to Tears.

Hotel keepers as a rule are always on the watch out for "suspects," or beats, and those who have been long in the business can pretty well tell the chronic beat the moment they lay eyes on him.

There is the smiling and over-familiar man, whose hair is sleeked down from the middle, whose collar is turned and coat buttoned up in tone style to hide the shirt which he is not wearing. He generally approaches the register with an air of the greatest importance, and after dipping the pen and holder as far down into the ink bottle as it will go, begins his name at one end of a line and ends it at the other. His baggage usually consists of a counterfeit umbrella and his pockets full of soap and towels which he has hoked from the hotel he last stopped at. Then there is the unfortunate little man who has had his pockets picked on the train, and who, after registering and ordering a room on the first floor, calls the proprietor to one side and tries to pawn him a gold ring, the last gift from a dear mother, for a small loan, enough to last him until a remittance comes from home. These and many other characters turn up every day or so, with such frequency indeed, that if a week passes by without one of them coming along, the average hotel keeper feels lonely.

But sharp as the hotel men are, once in a while a customer will come along who is still sharper.

Among the passengers set down at one of the city hotels last week, was an exceedingly urbane and affable young fellow, who bowed to everybody as he entered the hotel, signed his name with a great flourish and requested to be shown to the best room in the house. He carried a valise which appeared to be fairly crammed with something or other and telling the proprietor that it contained his valuables, consisting of bonds, money and clothing, requested that it be locked up in the safe until morning. This was done and the next day he had the treasured valise carried to his room. He remained at the hotel for a week or so, telling all who were serious enough to inquire of his business that he was a prospector and was looking about to see what kind of an opening there was here for a new enterprise which he proposed starting up. One day there was no response to the porter's knock at his door and finally when an entrance was made, the room was found to be empty. On the mantle was a card upon which was written: "Compliments of the rubber valise."

The fellow had been provided with a rubber valise, manufactured specially for beating purposes. He could take it out of his pocket before approaching a hotel, and blow it up until it appeared like a healthy well-filled valise, and after he had staid at a hotel as long as he wished, he would let the air out, put the valise in his pocket and start out for a stroll. This was the way one of our Charlotte hotels was taken in, and when the proprietor saw through the dodge he sat down and wept.

A few days afterwards, when he had partially recovered himself, he spoke of the matter to a friend, who sympathized with him and proceeded to tell him how Colonel Scoville, who runs the Kimball House, in Atlanta, and who is to open the Buford House, in Charlotte, was was taken in. A man arrived at the Kimball one night and informed the clerk that he was not feeling well, did not want any supper and would be glad to have a room at once. Quite early the next morning the electric alarm connected with the room to which the stranger had been assigned seemed to be unduly agitated. A boy was at once sent up, and returned, saying that the man up there was raising the devil about somebody robbing him, and wanted to see the proprietor immediately. Some thief had stolen his trousers and all the money he had about him. The boy hunted up Mr. Scoville as soon as possible, and it took that gentleman a good half hour to calm down his guest and persuade him to accept a new pair of trousers and say nothing about it. "Keep quiet, my dear sir, only keep quiet," begged Mr. Scoville. "My house is full of people, most of them having money and valuables about them, and if this were to get out it would empty the place in a day." After a time the new garments arrived, and as Scoville came down stairs with the man before breakfast, they first walked into the office, where $83.50, the amount claimed to have been in the stolen trousers, was counted out and placed in the latter's hand, with the request many times repeated, "Don't say anything about this, for Heaven's sake."

About 10 o'clock the same morning, as it was afterwards learned, the gentleman who had dined at the Markham House on the day previous came into the office of that hotel, and with a withering glance at the clerk, handed him $1 and called for a bundle that he had left there. The clerk meekly received the money, delivered the bundle, containing one pair of trousers, and the stranger went straight to the depot, where he bought a ticket and departed for a distant city.

Quite naturally Mr. Scoville used every effort to discover the thief who had robbed one of his guests, and after a time he related the story confidentially to Mr. Huff, of the Markham House, hoping for a little advice. Huff had been a little ashamed of himself for having refused to trust a man who so promptly parted with his apparel, and who so promptly paid up the next day. But Scoville's story set him to thinking, and in comparing notes they came to the conclusion that the man was a sharper. They also concluded to say nothing about it; but such things don't keep their word, you know.

Colonel Scoville and the Charlotte hotelier exchanged greetings by telegraph.

THE GATE CITY.

A LIVE SOUTHERN TOWN.

Some Impressions About the Late Presidential General Assembly, &c., &c. To the Editor of the Observer: I am aware that many of your readers from Atlanta, for last fall the grand exposition drew them thither in the best of good will.

Back to the city, incident to such occasions we are not favorably situated to appreciate the peculiar attractions of the city, proper. After a two weeks sojourn as a member of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, I take the liberty of conveying some impressions gained during my stay in that city. The first impression of Atlanta that you get is that it is a live city. No other city in the South has so many evidences of restless bustle and activity greet your eye. The principal streets are thronged with drays piled up with merchandise, and the central portion of the city is very irregular in appearance. The streets intersect at all sorts of angles; and the stores, instead of facing the street, are run up and down, giving their interior a rather awkward appearance. This is not true of them all, however, as on Whitehall street for instance, we find some grand emporiums piled high with goods of every description, and the cheapest of the most costly. Another feature of Atlanta is that it is a very hilly city. Much heavy grading has been done in portions of the city, and the street force is nearly all the time engaged in cutting down the high places and filling in the low in order to make the level of the city uniform. Atlanta has some fine residences but no palaces. I doubt whether any house in the city cost much more than Col. Cox's residence in Charlotte, but a great deal of money has been spent on the lawns and flower gardens; and there are to be found many of striking beauty in different portions of the city.

One of the most notable and attractive residences is that of Mr. E. E. Haney, a correspondent while in the city. The site is a hillside and embraces a solid square facing the East. The house is situated on the highest ground, and from the top of the terraces which are wrapped in a mantle of green, while the level walks between the terraces are covered with white gravel and present a pleasing contrast. Evergreen of different varieties abound and over and above all, the native oaks affording grateful shade complete the picture—one of unusual attractiveness.

The churches of Atlanta are a notable feature. They are numerous and many of them of imposing exterior. Their tall spires rear loftily in all parts of the city and add greatly to the panorama which is presented to the view from any elevated position. The interior of some of these churches is also worthy of admiration and comment, especially that of the First Presbyterian and the new Episcopal (not yet completed), and the Catholic Cathedral.

The sessions of the General Assembly were held in the city, and from the structure to look upon from without, but its chief attractions are within. There is a departure from the ordinary right angle corners, and graceful curves are substituted for the straight lines. A handsome reading desk is provided for the preacher, only slightly elevated, while the pews rise in graceful elevation from the pulpit to the rear of the church. The church is a richly frescoed in subdued colors—a very creditable piece of workmanship and is, I understand, the product of home talent. The deliberations of the Assembly were held in the city, and I myself, enjoying, for the first time, the privilege of being a member of that honorable body—the highest of our ecclesiastical courts. Much of the important work done and I trust that it was well done. The subject which elicited more general interest than any other was that of fraternal relations with the Northern Assembly. This question has been agitated by preceding assemblies during past years, but hitherto no satisfactory adjustment had been reached. It was evident early in the session that there was a strong under-current running in that direction and that this sentiment would ultimately secure decided action on the part of the Assembly. Such was the final result. As a basis for fraternal correspondence, a paper which was considered mutually satisfactory, was adopted by both assemblies, only two or three votes in each body were cast against the measure. The labors of the Assembly in Atlanta ended Monday night, and the closing hour was one of intense interest. The church was crowded with those who were anxious to witness the dissolution of the body and the farewell addresses were eagerly listened to, and the general handshaking that followed made it a time long to be remembered by some of us at least.

It is customary to speak of the general appearance of the members of church courts as a "remarkably fine looking body of men." As I will not follow in the usual strain but my comment is that very few if any General Assemblies have had so many young preachers, the majority of them being in the prime of middle age. The elders were more mature in appearance and many of them looked as if they had almost reached their three score and ten. But among them were found some who, like myself, might pass for very young. So that we presented the appearance of an Assembly well assorted, representing youth, mature manhood, and venerable fathers grown grey (and some bald) in the service. Our moderator, Dr. R. K. Smoot, deserves special mention. He is well known as authority on parliamentary law, having written and published a standard work on that subject. From his "wise dikt" you would not expect many appeals to be made. I believe there were only two during the entire session, neither of which were sustained. He has a large fund of humor and pleasantry, and the discreet use of his powers in that direction make him a general favorite. His little impromptu speeches, several of which he was called upon to make, were gems of the kind. On each of the Sabbaths spent in Atlanta nearly all the pulpits were tendered to and occupied by members of the General Assembly, and it is hardly necessary to say that we were favored with some good preaching. Dr. Girardeau, Dr. Farris, Dr. Smoot, and Dr. Le Ferre, were among the popular preachers and they all had crowded churches. There is some probability that Dr. Smoot will be called to the Central Presbyterian church in case Dr. Boggs goes to Columbia Theological Seminary.

In conclusion, let me say that the members of the General Assembly are keenly appreciative of the hospitality of the people of Atlanta, and we do not know any more appropriate or higher encomium to pass upon it than to say that it is truly Southern. We all have very pleasant recollections of Atlanta and her kindness to the Presbyterians.

Didn't Get the Breeches After All. A colored man walked into Latta's store yesterday morning, at an early hour and as all of the clerks were busy at the time, he began looking over a lot of clothing, and just at a time when he thought no one was looking he saw the very pair of pants that he wanted and in a twinkling had them carefully conveyed to his bosom and his coat buttoned over them. He strolled about for a time and then concluded to walk around awhile and come back to make his purchases. He was accosted by one of the clerks as he started out of the door and on the clerk insisting that the weather was too warm to be buttoned up that way, he bolted and ran, the pants dropping to the ground as he started. He has not been back to the store, nor to the city either, it is safe to say.

A Poorly Filled Special. Conductor John Fink brought in Captain John Dodson's train Thursday night, Captain Dodson being detailed to run the special train between Raleigh and Chapel Hill, last Thursday, on the occasion of the commencement at the University. The day was exceedingly disagreeable and rainy and but a very small crowd left Raleigh. The special was made up of ten cars and only twenty-one passengers were aboard when it left Raleigh, but of course this number was increased along the route. There was quite a good crowd in attendance from the first to the last of the commencement and everything passed off most successfully. But for the rain of Thursday there would have been 500 visitors from Raleigh alone.
