POLITICAL ROTATION.

The action of the majority of the National Republican convention of 1880 at Chicago, in thwarting the wishes of ambitious men by defeating the nomination of General Grant for the Presidency for a third term, will go down in history as commendable. Not only were the advocates of imperialism rebuked, but the men who had brought disgrace upon themselves and the administration of President Grant were so completely routed as to be scattered almost to the four winds, thus allowing the American people to breathe easier and freer, for what might have happened in the event of the re-election of Grant, being inaugurated Chief Magistrate a third term no one could in July, 1880, foretell.

Though the rule of "rotations" during good behavior is usually a salutary one with respect to judicial and administrative offices, the practice of rotation, of peremptory change of regime from time to time in the political departments of the government must commend itself to enlightened and free spirited citizens, on grounds of public utility, as in the interest of general reform in the public service. Experience has shown that chronic security of tenure even for the best of officers and employees in the non-political departments tends to generate and diffuse both inefficiency and corruption. And all experience has shown that long possession of power, in the political sphere, attended by a sense of immunity from official inquest, from impeachment for corruption or any kind of punishment, is invested with the same fatal spell to corrupt the possessor, and through the possessor generally corrupt the government. It is about the same whether the possessor is a dominant individual, a dominant clique or a dominant party organized as a close and irresponsible political corporation. The beauty of the system of republican government lies in the fact that the people can choose their rulers, and the same rulers are the people's servants. The possession of too much power has always been too much for the virtue of human rulers. Even angels, it has been said, clothed with too much power, and entrenched against responsibility, could hardly be expected to retain their virtue. A free people, therefore, have reason to insist upon political rotation, if for no other purpose than to offset the corrupting tendency of power among political chiefs in the public service. This rule should apply to National, State, Congressional, county and municipal offices.

It does not follow that elections ought to be numerous or arbitrary removals made for the mere gratification of aspirants for places. Too much of this latter business has been done. The people, as a whole, have no interest in "new deals," and "clean sweeps," simply as such. The head of a department concerns the people more than the body and tail of it. As a rule the people are weary and bewildered by a multiplicity of elections and of elective offices. The fewer persons they have to elect the more certain they are to take a real interest in politics, the more intelligently will they exercise their electoral functions, and the more surely will they impress their views and their wishes upon government and public policy. It is not a clean sweep of officers the people want, but a clean sweep of abuses, together with a practical change of policy in conformity with the progress of public opinion.

Of course the legislative body and the executive head of the government, whether President, Governor or Mayor, because eminently political in their functions, should be elected by the people. The people should always be allowed to govern.

A BRIGHTER OUTLOOK.

The Agricultural Future of the State. The efficient and gentlemanly Commissioner of the North Carolina Department of Agriculture, Mr. M. McGehee, in the last monthly bulletin issued from his office, gives some kindly advice to the farmers of this State in an article under the heading—"A Plea for Home-Grown Supplies." Mr. McGehee, who is a most attentive observer, takes a pride in the work of his office, and in everything that relates to the prosperity of the State, says that "whatever may be the outcome of the crops now growing, the present year will be a marked one in the agricultural history of the State. It has demonstrated that the dependence of our people upon the grains of the West is not the result of necessity, but of choice; that the tribute paid by the farmers of North Carolina is a voluntary one, from which, by a manly effort, it is easy to emancipate themselves."

This is the truth in a nutshell, and we do not believe that there is one farmer in twenty who will not admit it. Too long have our farmers been the slaves, we might say, of a speculative class and of the middlemen, and too long have they been compelled to pay a tribute to them and to be dependent on the West for supplies. They have been obliged to submit to extortionate charges for bread and meat, for the reason that they could not help themselves; but luckily the farmers' sky is growing brighter.

Twelve months ago, as Mr. McGehee aptly tells us, the drought was upon us in full force. The fruit crop had failed and the partial failure of the wheat and oat crop had inspired a feeling of misgiving and alarm. "The staff of life to a portion of our population had been stricken away; one of the principal sources of support for our teams was lost. There remained a possibility for the vegetable and corn crop, and our hopes were fixed upon them. But the summer was on, and while, in the striking language of scripture, the heavens over our head were as brass, streams and wells failed, the vegetable and corn crop withered away, and of the natural herbage hardly a green thing was left upon our fields. When the Fall was approaching it was natural that with the recollection of the severity of the preceding winter fresh in mind, our people should look forward to the coming year with anxiety and dread. Gloomy forebodings were indulged with regard to the subsistence of the poor among our people; in certain parts of the State the expediency of killing cattle for winter food was debated, since it was thought impossible to subvert them. There was a general feeling of profound despondency."

Then it was that the good advice of the Department of Agriculture was heard and heeded. Farmers were "urged to cultivate the turnip for winter food for cattle, of rye for early spring forage, and the cultivation of wheat upon the largest scale and with the most thorough preparation for the earliest provision for bread. Its counsels were seconded by the press, and by their aid the farmers were induced to act and act with energy. To very many about farmers these assurances were well enough known before; the agency of the Department and press was in making that universal among them which would otherwise have been confined to a few. But that difference was inculcated in its results, as things turned out—the difference, namely, between plenty among the many and among the few. The winter succeeded and the flourishing appearance of the small grain crops was the subject of admiring comment with every one who traveled over the State. The winter was succeeded by a spring favorable beyond any in human memory to the maturing of wheat and the grass crop. To-day these crops are harvested, and the most cautious admit that never before have the bounties of Providence, at this season, been poured upon us in such abundance. The oat crop has attained its fullest perfection. With the better varieties and upon the better class of lands, it is hard to estimate the yield. Bunches have been exhibited with stalks, the production of a single grain, ranging from 150 to 170. One has been placed in the Museum which has 123 stalks. Aowing but twenty grains to the head, the product from one grain is seen to be almost miraculous. Every one speaks of the abundance and rich golden hue of the wheat crop, showing that it is perfect in health, and giving assurance of a plentiful well-developed grain. Of hay of every kind a larger crop has or will be reaped than ever before. Of fruits and vegetables the supply, both in respect to quantity and quality, exceeds all experience. It is impossible for any person, however indifferent he may be to the course of events, to contemplate these results of blessing without a feeling of animated nature, without a feeling of gratitude. And in the breasts of those who habitually refer such results to Divine dispensation, this feeling will be quickened to profoundest depths, when they contrast the bright certainties and sanguine anticipations of the present summer, with the deep gloom and dark forebodings of the summer of the past year.

The above picture is certainly one to encourage our farmers, and we join the Commissioner in expressing the hope that the vantage ground gained by the agricultural people of North Carolina may not be lost? We should not again become pensioners on the West for our food and supplies. With our land teeming with plenty, the product of our own labor and our own good soil, shall we be beholden to others for the supply of our needs? Let our farmers answer this question. They should, with one accord say "no."

Mr. McGehee takes strong grounds against the single crop system, and says that it is only by a rotation of crops that land can be improved, or its original fertility preserved. He says: "The cultivation of one crop makes an incessant draught upon the elements which enter into it, and after a few years the soil sinks into exhaustion. But this system of cultivating one crop is the basis of this mode of farming. This system then discards light and knowledge, and degrades the soil, and the system, in its demands, with improvement visible everywhere around us, we have gone on, and still go on, as if our lands were an exception to all others."

"The fruits of the system (the single crop) have been bitter enough. It has been as injurious to the best personal qualities of the farmer as it has been to him in a material point of view. It has destroyed his independence of mind, and made a class of men who should be independent of everything save Providence alone, too often humble slaves to the system. The credit is sought on the one hand; while on the other, it has, to procure a present accommodation, snatched from the rewards of a year of toil. It is true that some may prosper by the system for a while under this state of things, but it is found after a time to be delusive and short-lived. The evil day will come, crops will be sometimes short; sometimes they will fail entirely. Then the payment promised by the farmer is but partially met, or not met at all. His creditor regards him with looks of coldness and reproach, or with averted eyes. He is addressed to him that he has failed to the quick. He is told that the season, he is told, is responsible for the result. He had hoped to save the gleanings of his stinted fields for the support of his family; but these are covered by the chattel mortgage and are no longer his. Meantime he becomes a prey to shame and distress, which unnerve him for all exertion, while privation and suffering fall upon those who are dearest to him. Sometimes, indeed, a generous consideration is extended to him in his misfortune, but such cases are rare."

We heartily agree with Mr. McGehee, and commend his advice to our people. We are sorry that our space will not admit of the publication of his entire article.

—WOMAN—

Better than the Smiles of Kings. To bring health and happiness to the homes of suffering women is a mission before which royal favor sinks into insignificance. What earthly benefactor can compare with one such protector from

"That dire disease whose ruthless power" "Whom beauty's transient flower" "Which gives ease to pain, joy for sorrow, smiles for tears, the roses of health for the pale of disease, the thought, elastic step for drooping shoulders, nights of soft repose for heavy hours of tossing restlessness, bounding vigor for languishing dullness, the reviving blood for the sharp and withered form of emaciation, a long enjoyment for a few days of pain and gloom, ending in an early grave? Such is the mission, such are the results of Dr. Benson's Skin Cure, which is hence truly and appropriately styled 'Woman's Best Friend.'"

"White," and all those irregularities of the womb so destructive to the health, happiness and beauty of women, disappear the more before a single bottle of this wonderful compound. First-class, Atlanta, Ga., Price, Retail size, 75¢; large size, $1.50. For sale by all druggists.

A LADY SAID

"These Horrid Pimples! No, I Cannot Get Go. Please Present My Excuses."

Probably two-thirds of the ladies in society and homes of our land are afflicted with skin diseases of various kinds, to do away with which, if it could be done without injury, would be the happiest event of their lives. Then she would have instead of a disfigured and marred countenance, one that would be handsome, or at least good-looking, for any one with a clear, pure skin, no matter what her features are, has a certain amount of good looks which attract everybody. As it is now, she imagines every one sees and talks about "those freckles," "those horrid pimples," and other blemishes with which she is afflicted, and this is true of either sex.

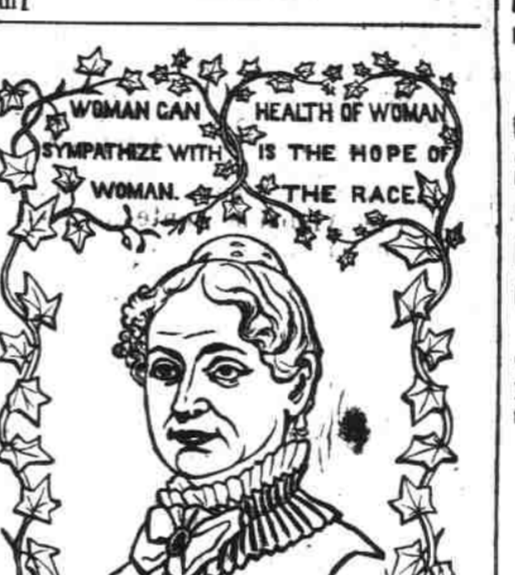

To improve this appearance great risks are taken; anise, nutmeg, or such strongly scented essences containing these death-dealing drugs, are taken in hopes of getting rid of all these troubles. In many cases, death is the result. No alleviation of the burning, itching and inflammation is given. All patients with Eczema (salt rheum), Tetter, Humors, Inflammation, Rough Skin, Eruptions of any kind, Diseases of the Hair and Scalp, Scrofula, Ulcers, Pimples or Tender Itchings on any part of the body, should know that there is hope for them. A sure, perfect and elegant remedy, known as "Dr. C. W. Benson's Skin Cure." It makes the skin white, soft and smooth, removes tan and freckles, and is the best toilet dressing in the world. It is elegantly put up in two bottles in one package, containing both internal and external treatment. Our readers should be sure to get this and not some old remedy resuscitated on the success of Dr. Benson's and now advertised as "The Great Skin Cure." There is only one—it bears the Doctor's picture and is for sale by all druggists. $1 per package.
