Whereupon the solicitor handed him-Mr. Labouchere's check for £1,000 and took his leave. The next morning the male Pigeon went to the bank and had his check cashed and found himself, for the first time in his life, in possession of a large and glittering pile of money. Hardly had he, with delighted foot-steps retired, when Mr. Labouchere appeared and asked at the counter if a check of his for a thousand sovereigns | 494,575, and the annual value would be, had been presented that morning. was told that it had. He requested that the check should be given him, which it was. Whereupon he departed to the home of his beloved, and gayly flourishing the cheek before her admiring eyes, informing her that he had her and there was his receipt. From that time on the male Pigeon has avoided his former partner, who, by the way, says she has never seen him in eight years, and she has been recognized in such circles as she can find entrance to as the wife of the distinguished editor of the London Truth. By the by, I hear to day, from trustworthy authority, that the divorce proceedings in Virginia will probably be quashed, and that some more open-ha, ded way of dealing with certain real estate transactions in the vicinity of Richmond will be resorted to. What was Done without a President. American Register. The United States of America, under the "Perpetual Union between the States," formed under The Articles of Confederation, fought through the great war of the Revolution, and achieved their Independence, against the most powerful nation of the world, without any President of the United States. The Congress of the Revolution, through the executive agency of committees, raised and equipped large armies, and fought successfully through the great war of seven or eight years duration, and defeated the armies of Great Britain without any President or King. The necessity of a President, or royal Ruler, has been vastly exag-gerated and overrated. Some people seem to think that they could not breath, live, or have their being without a President or Chief Ruler. And therefore, there must be figure-heads robed in splendor, royalty, and extravagance to preside, and to be admired and worshipped. What of actual efficiency and usefulness in our public affairs is the President, except to distribute the offices, honors, and emoluments of the country to the leaders of his party as rewards for partisan services? The State Department, with the Secretary of State at its head, administers the foreign relations of the country. So by the other departments, the other different branches of the public business are administered with fittle or no knowledge thereof by the President. It is said, however, that we must have some one at the head of affairs to preside as the symbol or embodiment of sover-eignty. But during the Revolutionary war, the most trying ordeal through which this country ever passed, they had no President.

The very statement of this fact, undeniable as it is, will doubtless irritate some men and cause them to boil over with rage. Woe betide the man who plucks the wizard beard of heary error. Alas! poor, weak, short-sighted human-ity! The truth is, that the principle of idolatry is so deeply implanted in the nature of man, that hero-worship is his besetting weakness, when not actually in the training and the struggle for his liberty. The Hebrew, it is said, when fed by the bread from heaven, murmured at his God, looked back over the of Egypt. And even when under divine government by so good a man as Samuel, the Israelites required Saul to be anointed and made King over them, in imitation of the royalty and pomp in imitation of the royally and pomp of surrounding nations.

In the convention which framed the constitution Dr Franklin, who was a philosopher as well as a statesman, characterized the provision for a single President as the feetus of a king, and said: "I am apprehensive, therefore, perhaps too apprehensive, that the government of these States may in future times end in a monarchy." His prophetic fears have been realized. The State governments have been dwarfed State governments have been dwarfed thrown into the shade. And the President has become a king, an exalt-

President has become a king, an exalted monarch, in all but in name. As Commander in Chief of the Army and New and exercising the power of appearament and removal over more than a hundred thousand public officers, and collecting and dispursing annually some four hundred millions of dollars of public revenue, the President, as the head of his own political party, and with his veto and influence with Congress, has become a monarch of vast powers. No man of intelligence can contemplate this matter in the light of history and doubt for a moment that the presidency will inevitably end in an overshadowing monarchy and a military despotism.

years ago) and all who were in the Mexican war. Then there is an organized effort to have $40 a month paid to each soldier who lost a limb or suffered injury "equivalent to that, and there are pension agents who could make out on the papers a bad cold caught by a team-ster equivalent to the loss of a leg by a soldier. Here is what the Commissioner of Pensions tells us in his late report, which has not been so extensively read and carefully studied as it should be. He says:

"There are now on file 253,648 pending and rejected late war claims, which were filed prior to July 1, 1880, and, allowing twenty per cent for rejection, there would be 202,919 for admission and entitled to the benefits of the arrears acts. If these should be placed on the pension roll simultaneously, he calculates that the amount of arrears on the present value of each case allowed. would be in the aggregate, in round numbers, $204,795,000. On the same proposition it would increase the present roll of pensioners from 291,656 to

Heretofore it has been our boast that when the rebellion was over, our army dispanded and returned to the ways of peace and the paths of industry, and our first point when we compare ourselves with the other nations of the earth is that we do not burden ourselves with a standing army. But no other nation ever had such a standing army of pen-

The Products of Alaska.

San Francisco Bulletin.

The collector at Sitka has some beautiful boxes made of yellow cedar. This is a clear grainless wood of a straw color, which has an odor somewhat like that of sandalwood, and nearly as pun-gent. The Russians in former times built many ships of this cedar, which is said to make the finest of timber for that purpose. Very little is known of the interior of Alaska, but on the coast this yellow cedar is the only tree which possesses much value for lumber. It grows somewhat scatteringly, and is pretty well cleared out about Sitka, where it readily brings ten cents per foot, sawed. In Peril Strait, however, it is still quite thick and large.

No one but Indians can lawfully cut trees in Alaska. But where the forests open to saw mills, small ones only could do a profitable business, and that, too, for but a limited time. Notwithstand ing that almost the entire coast is treecovered, most of the trees are worthless spruce. Wherever the ground has not been cleared, it is extremely difficult to move among these trees, the decaying vegetation being so deep that one sinks to the knees, and often

On Cross Sound, 100 miles from Sitka quarries of white and mottled marble have been discovered, which polishes as finely as any in the world. Anthracite coal has also been discovered.

Alaska's wealth will be made up of fur, mining, fishing and oil industries. Her agricultural and manufacturing interests will never make much of showing. New and rich mineral discoveries are being made every year in different portions of the territory.

What New York Is.

Gath's Letter. This is a city of very many rich people, but it is neither Christian nor Pagan; not Christian in its devotion to human nature, nor Pagan in its knowledge and respect for art and beauty. It has accumulations of art and literature which it does not understand or has no time to interpret. It has superb houses where it never takes any rest. It has magnificent wives and daughters, whose eyes and minds are exterior to the hands, searching for a consideration they cannot explain. In short, this city, while it has the respectability of much of the wealth of the continent, is really the harnessed slave to the continent working out the problems of American physical life and development, and the agents of this work die before they have any pleasure.

Sudden Death at the Presidential Reception.

Washington, January 1.—At the President's reception to-day after the Hawaiin minister, Mr Elisha A Allen, was presented to the President, and while on his way to the ante-room was taken with vertigo and spasms and was immediately removed to the anteroom and promptly attended by physicians, but shortly afterwards died.
When Mr Allen was taken sick the music stopped and upon announcement of his death the reception ended.

Apples as Food.

Apples have always been used for desert. Pliny tells of twenty-two varieties cultivated by the Romans; now we possess over two thousand kinds. As an article of feed they rank with the potato, and on occount of the variety of ways they can be cooked, are pre-ferred by many to the potato. As a substitute for pastry they are invaluable, feeding the brain as well as flesh-producing, preventing constipation and acidity. A ripe, raw apple is digested in an hour and a half, while a boiled potato takes three hours. Sweet apples baked or stewed should be used instead of the sour varieties. Every meal should have apples cooked in some form or other, and children should be allowed to eat as many as they want. Instead of using the quack nostrums sold for the blood, and other patent medicines, use apples freely as food, and as far as possible in the place of potatoes, and the testimony of the medical profession goes to prove the healthful qualities of this excellent fruit.
