LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS.

Condensed from the News and Observer.

WEDNESDAY, February 14. SENATE.—After the introduction of a number of local bills the sale of the State's interest in the Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley railroad again came up as the special order, Mr Poole's substi-tute being before the Senate instead of the original bill. Mr Pool spoke to his substitute, asking what use there was in discussing a measure that the syndicate absolutely refused to accept; they might as well bring things to a point by considering his substitute which proposed to buy what the State desired to sell. He was tired of sitting here day after day listening to amendments which loaded down the original bill. Every Senator along the line of the road seemed to along the line of the road seemed to think it his duty to place restrictions taken in this matter. He had understood that he would not press his substitute if their bill and amendments could be agreed on, and they had nearly agreed on them. But the Senator from Martin had revealed himself. He was directly opposed to the interests of the Western people, when the West had always rallied to the aid of the East. Mr. Morehead spoke in favor of the substitute. If it was adopted, when the road got to Mount Airy the State would have in the Treasury $88,000 in cash; and besides when this bill or the other bill passed neither became a law until it was left with the private stockuntil it was left with the private stockholders, and he spoke by authority in declaring that they would not endorse any bill that would not complete this road. He did not believe the stockholders would endorse the original bill, but the road would go to sale and be purchased by some parties who were inimical to the building of the road.

Mr. Clarke said the road ought to be built, but when we extend the hand to built, but when we extend the hand to our Western friends and say "we will give you aid," and then turn and sell the road for $55,000, without hedging it around so that the road must be built to Mt. Airy and Patterson, we give them no relief at all. Mr. Scott, of Rockingham, said he was really grieved when the bill was introduced that there was so much discord and dissatisfaction among its advocates. He knew there was a desire of each that the road should go through his particular locality. North Carolina was tired out and sick of her interests in railroads, and if this was an opportunity to rid herself on fair terms of her interest in this road, then let us avail ourselves of it. The idea with him was not what the road had cost, but what it would cost if North Carolina should remain tangled up with it. He believed, as a representative of the people, that if we could be made sure of the building of the road, even if the State got not a dime for it, it would be well to let it go, simply because it would result in building up and developing one of the best and richest sections in the State. Nothing could be safer or fairer to the State than the proposition offered by the substitute. Unless this proposition was accepted, the road, in his opinion, would have to go to sale, and North Carolina and the private stockholders would suffer, for either the State would buy the road, or else the Richmond & Danville, or Wilmington & Weldon, or some other railroad, would buy it and throttle it.

Mr. Womack said no Senator would go further for building this road than himself. He presented both sides of the question, and asked the Senate to take a common sense, practical view of the whole matter. This was the only syndicate that would buy the road, and we had the assurance of that syndicate that they would not accept the original bill, loaded as it was with amendments. and the private stockholders would not accept it. This substitute was acceptable to both syndicate and stockholders. He thought the substitute best the other day, and voted for it at the

Mr Linney said he was a little surprised that Senators now proclaimed themselves for the substitute because of the amendments to the original bill, when before the committee on internal improvements they voted against the substitute because it contained a bad trade. He put the question to the President of the Virginia road a few days ago, (a gentleman well known, Mr Sutherlin,) as to the value of the road with 47 miles built, and he said it would average $30,000. He maintained that under the substitute, which never had the sanction of any deliberative body, which never had the sanction of the clear-headed Senator from Guilford until this morning, this convict clause is stricken out and the convict force was transferred to these assignees for how long? for one year? The Senator from Guilford cannot say for what length of time. The substitute is a mere cobweb; no argument can be founded on it. Where's Mount Airy and the Patterson branch? Both are cut out of the original bill and the Shoe Heel branch but in it? Mr. Pemberton said the syndicate was required to complete the Shoe Heel branch next year. Mr Linney: But the Shoe Heel branch may sprout like a tobacco plant and put out other branches; we can't tell about that. Mr Alexander said this matter should be governed by business principles. If it be true that the syndicate have rejected the first proposition, it takes two to make a trade. If a trade is made it must be with the syndicate's consent, and it stands exactly in the position of an individual driving a bargain. This must take that business course, and as the first proposition had been rejected he could see no reason why the substitute should not be adopted. Mr Pinnix said he was satisfied with the honesty of purpose of the syndicate and therefore would vote for the substitute. Mr Morehead replied to Mr Linney, as to the convict clause, saying that the provision as to convicts in the substitute was in the bill that Mr Linney advocated yesterday. Mr Clark again spoke against the sub-

Mr Payne said he could not support the substitute, and merely desired now to explain his position and the vote he would cast; having heretofore fully discussed this matter it was not his purpose to make any speech. On Friday the pending amendments were agreed to by both sides. On Monday the friends of the syndicate proposed an amendment in their interest in regard to the working of the convicts upon the road; this demand was granted by the Senate and the amendment ado; ted. We are now asked to take back tracks and adopt this substitute without desired restrictions. The demands of the West are just and entitled to consideration by this Senate.

Mr. Boykin said that the bill was un-constitutional. Article 9, section 1, of the Constitutional. Article 9, section 1, of the Constitution prescribes the qualifi-cations of electors. This bill makes an additional qualification. Suppose the bill passes; an election is ordered in a white district; a colored man offers to vote; he is refused; contests his right to vote, and the court shall hold the law unconstitunal, then we have the very same trouble as we would have if justices of the peace and county com-missioners were elected. When a citi-zen is an elector at all, he is an elector for all purposes. (Van Bokkelen vs. Canady, 73 N. C.)

Mr Black agreed with Mr. Boykin that the bill was unconstitunal, and besides, it being an office of no profit, good men in a county would not want it and only bad men would aspire to it. He thought the commissioners in the counties should select the men.

Mr. Dotson said he could not see that it was unconstitutional; it was merely carrying out the spirit of the constitu-tion that kept the races apart in the

Mr Womack argued that it was unconstitutional. Besides the cost of elections was a big item. It would not begin to do; it would be outrageous: it would be greatly to the prejudice of the colored race; in fact in all its bearings it was wrong and impractical. He moved to lay the bill on the table. Mr Pemberton moved to adjourn.

Among the bills on the calendar disposed of were the following: Mr Page moved to reconsider the vote by which the Wake county stock bill failed to pass its second reading. Mr Powers, of Cumberland, moved to lay that motion on the table. The motion to table was lost.

The motion to reconsider prevailed and the bill was withdrawn. To incorporate the town of Maiden, in Catawba county passed third read-

To enable Cumberland county to build a free bridge across the Cape Fear river, passed third reading. To authorize Tyrrell county to levy a special tax. Passed its third reading.

To repeal the act making the killing of live stock by the cars indictable. Mr. Crouse said: This is a question in which my people have an interest, and I desire to say that I do not see why such great interest is manifested here to relieve the railroads, when I have never heard of any complaint by the railroad authorities as to the workings of this law. As the law is now all lawsuits are avoided. If this law is repealed, then all suits for the killing of stock will have to be brought in the Superior Courts, requiring an attorney, and a loss of time, which will cost more than their stock is worth. Our people do not want lawsuits with railroads, and I do hope this bill will not pass. Mr Ray spoke against the bill. Mr Ray moved to table, which was

A Thriving Town, Wholesale Business, &c .-- Trade in Medicinal Roots and STATESVILLE, Feb 15th .- Among the many towns in Western North Carolina none have improved more rapidly than Statesville. The enterprise of its merchants generally, the amount of wholesale business done, the tobacco ware-houses, with their daily sales of the fragrant weed, the proximity to the rich mineral resources of our State, and last, but by no means least, the enormous business done in the collection of medicinal herbs, barks and roots by the Wallace Bros, under the direction of their excellent botanical purveyor, Mr M E Hyams, who was formerly in the service of the Confederate government in the same capacity, exceeds anything that any one could conceive, and serves to make Statesville almost, if not altogether, a North Carolina city. The town is regularly laid out in streets and avenues, which are all appropriately named, and their names painted on handsome wooden tablets, that are nailed upon all the corners at the intersection of the streets.

But what such a town needs very much is a first class hetel. Since the St Charles House has changed hands it has been much improved, and our young friend, Mr James, who is the present proprietor, is exerting his utmost to make the St Charles "first class in all appointments." He is very attentive to his guests, and even when his house was crowded during court week he seemed to be everywhere looking after their interest and comfort.

Last Sunday the Rev V R Stickley, of Salisbury, organized a Lutheran church in Statesville with about fourteen members, and which will soon be increased to twenty. He has preached here on two Sundays, and expects to serve this new church enterprise one Sunday in every month; he is a very popular preacher, and has gained the hearts of the people. He will visit them once more next Wednesday, when a site will be selected on which to erect a church edifice at an early day. He preaches for the present in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association
